Mr. Truman Repudiates His Apparent Endorsement of Wallace Speech

 Government Fails Ships 0 perating $\begin{gathered}\text { Mich, prevaied upon President Truman to re- } \\ \text { putate his earrier } \\ \text { mendes }\end{gathered}$ merce Secretary Henry $A$. Wallace's specch a a statement of American foreign policy, it wa understod tonight. Secretary of State James F. Byrnes him remained in the background, avoiding parself remained in the background, avoiding par ticipation in transatlantic telephone discussio with Mr. Truman, but it was learned that Con nally and Vandenberg held lengthy conversa tions with the President during which they spoke bluntly and frankly

It was after these conversations that Mr . Truman announced there was no change in American foreign policy and that there would be none without discussion and conference among the president, secretary of state and congressional leaders.

There was no doubt here that the substance of remarks to President Truman by Byrnes' two senatorial advisers followed the line of statements they made in Paris today to the effect that America must stand united behind a bipartisan foreign policy if the United States is to maintain its influence at the Paris peace conference.

The American delegates still fear the Russians will interpret the incident as indicating a wide diversion of opinion among American for eign policy makers -- an interpretation that neither Byrnes, Connally nor Vandenberg will admit. admit.

Mainly they are worried about the effect of the incident upon the progress of the conference, which still has a poor chance of finishing in time for the postponed meeting of the United Nations Security Council.
'NATURAL MISUNDERSTANDING."
WASHINGTON, Sept. 14. (UP).---President Truman today disavowed Secretary of Commerce Henry A. Wallace's controversial ease-up-on-Russia speech as a statement of U. S. foreign policy. But he approved Wallace's right to say what he did.

In an extraordinary statement occasioned by the international uproar caused by Wallace's speech --- and Mr. Truman's apparent endorsement of it .-- the President assured the nation and the world that there has been no change in established U.S. foreign policy.

He summoned reporters to his office to explain there had been a "natural misunderstanding" of his answer to a Thursday press conference question regarding Wallace's speech

Democrats Seem to Be Giving Aid to Enemy

Peacock, Crews Head Cisco Ministers for Year

WHO SAID PORK CHOPS:-Since the restoration of OPA ceilings on meat, only poor qually hogs aching the Chicago market. Skown here is a group odes of porks are not for sale.
Many weighed less than 170 bounds. Too grades of

NISS HNES FIRSS PEANUT OUEE

Steady Drift Away G a me With CleFrom Communism burne Was Great Says Dr. Clinchy Disappointment

