The publisher rushed to the scene, caught up with the lady, and was immediately solicited to buy his own paper. Asked how she was doing, the lady seplied; "I'm having good luck. I must have sold about 45 so far."

And for whom are you work

Why, sir, I'm working for friend of mine, but I happen to own the paper you are selling for 25 cents a year and the people you've sold are going to expect me to de it, and it can't be done for 25 cents," Strunk re-ing?" asked Strunk.

The lady explained she was only helping because she thought it was such a fine paper and the Lord had persuaded her to put it inte the hands of a few more people. She said she would gladly pay the difference, whereupon she pulled $140 from a roll of several hundred dollars, Strunk said, and paid him off in new $20 bills. Strunk rushed home and paid off his creditor. "Otherwise, this

Road Maps Due for Change

There are 3,394,500 miles of roads and streets in the day convention to be held at the United States, and motorists trying to find where they want to go on this fantastic network are expected to use ton, July 3-7, it was announced more than 140 million road maps this year.

Commercial map makers, dil companies, turnpike authorities, tourist groups, chambers of commerce and automobile clubs print and distribute maps, some of which are crude, colorless approximations of what motorists can expect ahead. Other maps are accurate, colorful and fifteen to be held this summer. helpful.

But since the first highway map was published in 1910, maps have slowly built up a reputation for themselves as the most difficult things in the world to fold. Most motorists who try to get a map refolded find soon enough that they might as well be trying to fold a highly tensioned bed spring.

Some map makers have eliminated the folds by the simple expedient of making the maps smaller. But, because strations for this purpose. motorists expect to travel long distances quickly, small maps are not satisfactory.

However, several marked improvements in maps seem to be in the making. One company is making a roll map that does not have to be folded. Instead, you crank it. The big drawback with this one, which is mounted on the dash panel, is that you must buy it. With free maps around, it is unlikely that roll maps will sell in large quantities.

One map-making group is said to be considering the idea of marking roads with black lines if they are not safe for night driving. Considering that it is considerably safer to drive on roads that have their hazards marked with reflective signs that can be seen at night, good lights illuminating dangerous spots, or such simple devices as white lines to emphasize the shoulder of the road or the centerline, such marking of maps makes sense.

One national magazine recently suggested that billboard-size maps be located along major highways. With vices of the church, this Lord's a place in front of them for cars to park, such maps would make motoring a little easier. "Map ahead" signs would spea be located a few hundred yards ahead of the billboardmap parking place, so motorists could slow down and There will be a guest speaker a pull off the road to find out where they are and where the 7:30 p. m. worship.
