The fire company and citizens were promptly on the scene, but from the first it was seen that the building was doomed. Calls were put in for the Muleshoe and Amherst fire companies, which responded promptly and made record runs. A high south wind was blowing at the time, and these companies were vigilent to guard against the spread of the flames.

The grammar school building located about 200 feet from the burned structure, was prevented from catching fire by the thoughtful work of the firemen, so that unit of the Sudan school was saved. Conflicting reports are current as to the origin of the blaze, some asserting it was first discovered in the auditorium, while others insist it was first seen in the boiler room plant in the basement.
