Brefly summarized, the agreement provides that debtor governments shall be relieved of payments due between July 1, 1931, and July 1, 1932, aggregating approximately 800 millions of dollars. Germany will be re-Heved of reparations payments to the former allied and associated governments totaling nearly 400 millions of Great Britain, France, Italy, Belgium, and other debtors will be relieved of war debt payments approximating 400 millions.

The greatest sacrifice will be made by the United States, which will forego war debt receipts totaling 260 mil-

Beginning July 1, 1933, the deferred reparations and war debt payments will be paid in installments during a ten-year period, in addition to the regular current payments.

Payment by Germany of conditional reparations totaling 243 millions will be unreservedly suspended. Germany will be required, however, to pay the ional reparations, amounting to $130,600,000, with the understanding that this amount in full will be loaned back to Germany.

A loan of about 25 millions will be made to Central European countries if necessary by the federal reserve banks of the United States and European central banks.

The accord reached was entirely matisfactory to both the Americans and the French. President Hoover gained his chief point, the gist of the whole plan, for Germany does not have to pay any international debts for one year. The French statesmer congratulate themselves because the accord calls for the moral support of the signatories in getting a private loan for France's central European friends, and lays upon Germany moral responsibility for not using her moratorium saving for armaments.

Foreign Secretary Julius Curtius and Chancellor Bruening of Germany, of course, are pleased beyond expression, and the former paid warm tribute to the work accomp shed in Paris by Secretary Mellon. The German press, however, professes to be disgusted with the compromise, several influential papers declaring that it wrecks the plan entirely.

In concluding his announcement of the agreement, President Hoover touched on the question of world disarmament, which he considers the second feature of his program for restoring economic prosperity.

HAVING ably seconded Mr. Hoo-ver's effort to bring about the moratorium, the British government called a conference of the powers to work out the details of the plan. The premiers and foreign ministers are to meet in London, and it is expected Secretary Stimson will participate as an official observer when he reaches England. This conference will meet from time lo time for several months, it is understood, and may continue to function for several years. Before this body, toward the end of the one year Hoover moratorium, will come the question of the capacity of Germany to continue paying the Young plan reparations, the question of extending the Hoover debt holiday another year, and the question of revising reparations and war debts downward.

Lesson for July 26 CHRISTIANITY SPREAD BY PER. SECUTION.

LESSON TEXT-Acts 7:54-8:4; 11:19-21; I Pet. 4:12-19. GOLDEN TEXT—Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer: behold, the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days: be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.

PRIMARY TOPIC — The Gospel Spread by Persecution.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Christianity Spread by Persecu by Persecution.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Martyrs of the Early Church.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Results of Persecution.

Christianity is a life, a "way." Because it is the life of God expressing itself through men, it is indestructible. Its genius is to prosper through opposition. "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church." Prosperity may ruin the church, but persecution growing more and never

1. Stephen Stoned (Acts 7:54-60). In Stephen's ministry as deacon he testified of Jesus Christ and wrought miracles in confirmation thereof. This aroused violent opposition on the part of the synagogue officials. Not being able to meet the wisdom as Stephen spoke by the Holy Spirit, they stirred up the people against him. They arrested him and brought him before the council. They accused him of blasphemy and employed false witnesses against him. They could not silence him by argument before the council so they decided to do so by violence.

1. Stephen looking into heaven (v. 55), Instead of looking about upon his murderers in their raging fury he looked up to heaven. This was the secret of his calmness.

2. He saw the glory of God (v. 55) A vision of God's glory only can be seen by those who are loyal to him even unto death.

3. He saw Jesus at the right hand of was standing showed his actual interest in the sufferings of his faithful witness.

3. Preaching the Word (v. 4). Though forced out of Jerusalem, they did not go out in a panic, but went "everywhere preaching."

III. Preaching the Lord Jesus at Antioch (Acts 11:19-21). In the providence of God a new missionary center was now being prepared. With the conversion of Saul and his commission as the apostle to the Gentiles, a new center was needed. Antioch was well suited as that center, for it was the natural door to the Graeco-Roman world. The persecution at Jerusalem sent the disciples as far as Antioch.

1. Preaching to Jews only (v. 19). In this they followed the example of Christ, They had not yet come to realize the universality of the gospel. Even thus Wmited, they were used in carrying out the divine purpose.

2. Preaching to the Grecians (v. 20). The disciples who had come from Africa and Cyprus were of broader sympathy than those of Palestine, and they courageously crossed the line preaching the Lord Jesus to the Greeks.

3. The hand of the Lord upon them (v. 21). Perhaps the Holy Spirit was poured out anew as at Pentecost. Their ministry was accompanied with the divine blessing. Many believed on the Lord through their ministry. IV. Rejoicing in Persecutions (I Peter 4:12-19). Fiery trials are to be expected by the disciples of Christ. The world hated Christ and put Him to death. To be reproached and hated for Christ's sake is a badge of honor, and those who may be called upon thus to suffer should rejoice.

CORRECT SUMMER POULTRY FEEDING

Shade and Open-Front Quarters Favored.

In order that your egg basket is well filled during August, it is necessary that hens be made as comfortable as possible. They should have plenty of shade during the day and open-front quarters at night.

The fowls do not require as much fattening and energy-giving foods in the summer as in the winter, hence the feed should not be so heavy. One part corn to two parts oats and two parts wheat will make enough corn for the scratch feed. Corn is a good feed but must be used with caution during the summer.

Never feed a wet mash during the immer. The hens will eat too much of it, and it will, therefore, tend to fatten. There is also danger of a wet mash souring during hot weather, even though extreme care is used, and a wet, sour mash would be sure to get the digestive organs out of condition. Milk is an excellent poultry feed at all times, but it is especially fine for ot weather. It may be fed as sweet milk, sour milk or buttermilk, but care should be taken that it is always fed the same. For this reason it is usually not advisable to feed, or try feed the milk sweet. Unless exreme care is used, the milk will sour n the vessels and bowel trouble will

When you realize that 80 per cent of the white of an egg is water, and 52 per cent of the egg yolk is water, you can clearly see the importance of plenty of fresh water, in clean vessels, and kept as cool as pessible.

Cod Liver Oil Retains Vitamin D Efficiency

As has been suggested by many oultry authorities, it is not necessary to make frequent new mixtures of cod-liver oil in mash in order to God (vv. 55, 56). The fact that Jesus insure vitamin D potency, if further tests agree with one reported at the Kansas experiment station.

Five all-mash rations were prepared and tested upon chicks when the mash was freshly mixed, when six months old and when one year The feed was kept in burlap sacks and stored in a dry, well-ventilated room where no sunshine entered. One per cent of tested codliver oil was added at the time the feed was mixed. After storage six tained enough vitamin D to prevent

Breeding Pullets for

High Egg Production Breeding for high production has made the matter of helding pullets 2. The disciples scattered (v. 1). The difficult to hold pullets out of producof some of the other more common heavy breeds laying at four to four and one-half months of age, but these pullets are certain to lay many extremely small eggs and are very likely to molt. A pullet that does not come in production until she is six months old 's in much better condition for the duties ahead of her.

Cull All Poor Pullets

When Selling Roosters Cull out all the poor pullets and dispose of them when the cockerels are sold at broiler age.

Constitutional vigor is the cornerstone on which to build the selection of prospective winter layers. This is indicated by a broad, deep and comparatively short head that is cleancut; strong beak, and large, bright and prominent eyes, Crow-headed and beefy and masculine pullets should be culled out.

The breast should be full, deep and well-rounded; the neck relatively short, blending well with the head and body; legs of moderate length and shanks flat, rather than round,

Why Hen Molts

An old hen may be molting now for two reasons; first, she may be a poor Myer who figures that the spring of the year is the only time of year she needs to work, and second, she may get her feed so irregularly that she really thinks hard times are coming and she might just as well shed her old dress and get a new one made for the winter. If she is a poor layer, she is through work and ready to take a trip to town. There is no excuse for keeping star boarders.

House Insulation

Tests at Nebraska Agricultural colleges indicate that at the usual prices insulation for a 20 by 20-foot poultry house will cost about $50, or about 40 cents per bird housed. If this cost is spread over the life of the house, it amounts to about two eggs per hen per winter. It is known by experience that quick changes in temperature in winter may throw a flock out of production for several days or even for of glory is the lowliest bearer of the the rest of the winter, just when egg cross of self-denial.-A. Immunize All Pigs to Prevent Cholera

Advisable to Apply Treatment Before Weaning.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)—WNU Service. Swine growers in localities where there is danger of hog cholera may prevent future losses in their herds immunizing the spring pigs against the disease, says Dr. T. P. White, veterinarian of the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture. Even if hog cholera has never occurred on the immediate premises, there is always a possibility that infection may be introduced into the herd through various channels when the disease exists anywhere in the neighborhood

Pigs from immune sows have a degree of natural immunity against chol era, but this protection lasts only while they obtain all their nourish ment from the sow. It gradually dimin ishes as the pigs grow and by the time they are weaned the immunity has entirely disappeared. It is therefore advisable to apply the treatment before the pigs are weaned in order to insure protection against the dis ease. The pigs are more easily handled at that age and the cost of im munization is considerably less than when they are older and larger,

Guard Against Injury

Done by Common Worms Corn ear worms are so common in this country that most farmers do no consider it worth while to make effort to fight them, but tests conducted by the United States Department of Agriculture show that ears with long,

tight husks suffer less than half as much injury as ears having short, loose husks. Ears with long, tight husks are characteristic in some varieties, the de partment says, but there is enough variation in all varieties for a farmer to select for seed only ears with long tight husks. In this way he can build up a strain having better husk characteristics. Long, tight husks are also good proction from other insect pests of corn, such as the corn weevil, in sections where corn is stored in the husks This is an additional reason for farm ers to select their corn in the field. where they can give proper consideration to the type of husk.

Avoid Beetle Injury to Young Asparagus Plants

Beetle injury to young asparagus shoots may be avoided by cutting the crop clean every three to five days. In this way all the eggs deposited on the shoots will be removed before they hatch or soon afterwards. All volun and twelve months this feed con- teer plants should be destroyed and it will often pay to have a row here and rickets in chicks up to eight weeks there uncut to serve as a trap on which the beetles will congregate, feed, and lay their eggs. Here they may be poisoned with calcium arsenate or lead arsenate. After the cutting season, plants may be protected from beetle injury by two or three applications of calcium-arsenate or lead arout of production more difficult. It is senate dust, 5 pounds mixed with 85 The use of poultry for the destruction of the beetle is practiced with good results in some localities.

Control of Weeds Most Important With Flax

The control of weeds is probably one of the most important things to consider in growing flax, says the Iowa State college. That is also one reason why newly broken soil free from weeds has generally been used. Now that wilt-resistant varieties have been developed, wilt-free soil is only essential from the standpoint of weed control. In the last few years several large-seeded, wilt-resistant varieties have been isolated-Bison, Buda and Rio. Last year the Bison variety surpassed all other large-seeded varieties in the Iowa experiments. The Bison variety appeared particularly well adapted to early planting, the April 30 seeding yielding highest

Agriculture is the foundation of all business.

Keep each colony queen right continously throughout the breeding season. Experiments show rape to have about the same value as a hog pasture as red clover. Haphazard exchange of seed frequently leads to a wider spread of disease, weeds and insects. There is no substitute in farm products for quality and the American buy ing public is willing to pay well for it.

Give the asparagus bed a dressing of good fertilizer. It won't hurt it to salt it but it won't do any particular good and besides it is a waste of salt.

It is built low and open on both sides and has the appearance of being a cross between a small car and a dairy delivery wagon. The tests so far have shown that it speeds up the work very greatly.

POPULARITY

Whenever an individual or a product enjoys popularity there is always some good reason or combination of reasons back of it. There are many reasons why more than nine million boxes of St.Joseph's Aspirin have been sold in one single year. For instance, thousands of people now realize that it is neither sensible nor necessary to pay more than 10c for 12 tablets of genuine pure aspirin. St.Joseph's is both genuine and pure and meets every government standard. More than 10,000 new users every day are asking their druggists for "St.Jo-seph's," now the largest selling pure aspirin in the world for 10c.

THE STORY

Six bandits board the steamer, Minight Sun, tied to the bank of the Mackenzle, hold up Father Claverly and other passengers, kill Jimmy Montgomery, formerly of the Mounted, and get away with gold dust and furs. Corp. Bill Hardsock reports the crime to Sergt. Alan Baker at the Mounted Police post at Fort En durance. Baker has a dispute with his incompetent superior, Inspector Haskell, over plans for the capture of the bandits.

"Hmmph! Maybe." Haskell lit a cigarette, and went on studying the map. Turning, he ordered:

"You'll take the launch and the five men, Baker, and go up the Alooska. If you don't overtake those bandits before reaching the Forks, leave the launch there, split your party, three men each, and follow up both those branches-"

Alan objected, "But three men against six, the six who pulled a trick like that robbery-three mightn't be able to handle them. They've got murder charges over them, they've got a fortune in their possession; they're going to put up a finish fight."

"Three men can handle them. Three men with the law behind them-

"A city cop may be a squad by himself," Alan interrupted, "but in the bush a man is a man. A legal bullet don't kill any deader than an outlaw bullet. Men who'll hold up a big steamer in broad daylight and who face the gallows if caught, aren't going to be paralyzed by the sight of a uniform. I believe my party shouldn't split. We ought to stick together and whip up that left branch. That's the fork they'll take."

"You're merely guessing," Haskell said coldly. "You don't know which branch they'll take. By my plan you'd be sure to overtake them on one branch or other."

"Yes, and have half my men shot up. I'm responsible for them. I know what that kind of responsibility means. You're hog-tying me with orders I know are dead wrong."

Haskell tapped the table with his penkaife. "I've given you my reasons, Baker, and listened to yours. If you refuse to obey orders, you'll stay here at the post, and I'll put Corporal Hardsock in charge of this detail. Take your choice."

Alan was not the fool to believe Haskell was bluffing. The man would keep him here and demote him for refusing to obey a command. He had been waiting months for just such a chance. It was a question of holding out against those ignorant instructions or getting away with the men and making the best of it. Perhaps, after all, he would catch up with the bandits before they reached the Forks.

Beaten, weary of arguing, he gave in. "All right, inspector. I'll follow both branches."

To cut off further delay he whirled abruptly on his heel and strode out. Burgoon came down from barracks.

A little later Whipple came and timidly took his seat in the launch. Alan and Bill and Younge were storing aboard guns, tent, grub and blankets. On the terrace above, with a book in her lap, Elizabeth Spaulding watched

They were at last away on the pur-

But all Alan's ardor had gone. All his leaping urge to be on the chase had gone. Premonition whispered, and its whisper chilled him. As he glanced around at his men, at the comrades he was leading and was responsible for, he was thinking that tomorrow this time two or three of them might be dead-somewhere up the spruceburied Alooska.

CHAPTER III

A Call to Vengeance

During that dash down the Mackenzle, Alan's thoughts were not enviable. . . . "They used Margaret Fournier as a means of making their getaway from the steamer. It worked so well then that they might try the idea again. They might try to capture Joyce and use her as a sort of hostage to protect themselves." But somehow he did not greatly fear they would do this. He remembered the gun she always carried, his own gift to her on her twentieth birthday. A black automatic, a tiny thing like a toy, it nevertheless was blunt and effective as a terrier bulldog. That big red-bearded bandit who had threatened to put a bullet "squar' a'tween" the eyes of Margaret Fournier, would likely get one between his own if he tried any brutality with Joyce Mac-

To Alan it seemed pretty clear that Bill in his haste and excitement had made a mistake about those men being strangers to every one aboard the steamer. It didn't look possible. They knew this country, knew it intimately. It took years to learn the ins and outs of so huge a region. But they knew. Alan concluded: "They aren't strangers, of course. Bill just made a mistake." Half-hidden between two blanket packs Constable Whipple sat fingering his rifle, peering ahead anxiously, as though at any moment he expected to meet the outlaw canoes here on the Mackenzie. Alan watched him with something of scorn in his eyes. Whipple was constantly spying upon the other men, listening with long ears, reporting everything that happened and a lot that did not.

Forty miles below Endurance, sweeping near to shore around a great bend, Alan looked ahead and sighted the Midnight Sun out in midstream, plowing steadily up south. At his gesture Pedneault swerved the launch and snubbed its headlong speed, and Bill began unlashing one of the canoes. As the two craft drew nearer, Alan rose up and signaled that he wished to come aboard the steamer. The boat stopped, a ladder was let down. Paddling across in the birchbark, he and Bill hurried up on deck.

Margaret Fournier was safely back on board. Several of the men, hastily patching one of the smashed canoes, had followed up the Alooska a mile and found her on a willow island where the bandits had set her off.

When Alan came on deck, almost his first sight was of Jimmy Montgomery's little girl, perched upon a pile of cargo, showered with care and attention from every one. As he glanced at the tiny golden-haired tot, Alan thought of her mother dying less than a year ago, of her young father cut down today by an outlaw's bullet; and he had a swift vision of the bleak orphanage, the friendless and homeless life, which lay ahead for her, now that Jimmy was dead. He was not deceived by the attention she was getting now. Every one was all sympathy for her today, but that would cool mighty quick; and then she'd be thrown into some orphanage, maybe along with halfbreed and Indian children. Alan thought, "She's Jimmy's child; Jimmy was my partner; it's up to me to do something about her."

With nothing more definite than at Endurance tonight. Give her to Elizabeth. Say I'll be back in two or

Following the old captain, he stepped softly, hat in hand, into the one well-fitted cabin of the steamer. He remembered Jimmy as a trail partner and a quiet gentle soul and the most utterly fearless man he had ever known. Stone silent he stood beside the berth looking down for the space of half a minute, sick at heart, his eyes blurring. Why had it been Jimmy who was cut down?-a young man, a young father, the best and bravest

Then like a small whisper in his loss, a thought came, edged with pride in Jimmy and the manner of his

"You were the only one who drew a gun. You knew they'd kill you . . . a belt-gun against six rifles; but you stood up and shot. You were always that kind; and so was Curt. Now you're both gone; now I'm alone, of

The desolation was unbearable. Bill following, he turned and went out of the cabin, into the sunshine of the deck. A grim mood had come over him, a mood shot through with personal and deadly intention. He was no longer merely the stern and efficient representative of the law. Vengeance, a burning and righteous vengeance, had entered his heart.

With a dozen men crowding around to listen, he questioned Skipper Ashmun briefly.

"Bill said these men were strangers. That can't be. Didn't you recognize them at all? Haven't you got some idea who they were?"

"Alan, I positively never seen a man of 'em till I looked up and there they stood p'inting their weapons at us. And I see just about everybody that goes up and down the river."

"And they knowed the lay of the land like a book," another man spoke up. "That's the queerest part of 't." Alan was fairly staggered. Bill had reported accurately. The men were

them strangers, how did they come to know the lay of the land so perfectly? -where to strike, when to strike, how to escape by a straight shoot to their one superlative refuge, the Thal-

In all his years of police service he had never met quite so dark a circumstance as this.

As he and Bill went down the ladder, the rail was lined with people wishing them a quick capture, wishing the criminals a swift and speedy justice. Alan did not hear, did not care. But as he stepped into the canoe and with a shove sent it skirling toward the launch, he did hear one voice from some man on the steamer; and it rang in his ears like a croak of evil prophecy:

"Going after men like them, Alan Baker, you'd better take your luck along!"

At the MacMillan trading post Joyce had lighted candles in the kitchen and trading hall. Though she hardly knew just when her father would return from his fur-buying trip, she had kindled a comfortable fire in his bedroom and had prepared a supper of scones and breaded mushrooms and willow ptarmigan which she herself had shot that morning.

As she stood tiptoe at a pantry the night. She went over to the window and there heard it more distinctly -a faint drone that rose and fell with the ground winds drifting out of the

The puzzling sound grew louder, plainer. Then suddenly Joyce knew. The police launch! Coming up the Big Alooska. Coming slowly because of the treacherous channel, but driving on through the twilight in spite of the danger. That launch went out only on matters of importance. And this patrol must be very important, to bring the men up a perilous river at this hour.

Throwing a cape about her shoulders, she ran through the trading hall, out into the sharp pine-scented air; down to the cance landing at the river bank.

As she stood on the mud-filmed molding cape and dress closely about her vigorous young body, Joyce tried patrol. Her girlish pride was crying Baker. Her rational mind was warning that it would be better for her if she never saw him again at all. But no pride or rationalizing could beat down the secret throbbing expectancy of meeting Alan, of hearing his voice, in a few minutes more. (TO BE CONTINUED.)

PETER

THE GREAT

HE thing that broke Peter Tarbell's spirit was a ringing blow across the right cheek, administered to him, within full view of a crowded back-stage, by an extravaganza queen then in the full glory of her monarchistic reign.

As doorkeeper and general guardian of the constant runnel of traffic of one sort or another through the small office that led to the wings of the theater, Peter constituted a one-headed cerberus who stood guard against claimants for the attention of the high-handed musical comedy despot of the moment, Hilda Taypay.

A riot of colorful naughtinesses, temperamental outbursts, generosities, tempers, affabilities and nonsense of a brand that had captivated Broadway, to be in her troupe or associated in any way with her in the theater, was to be victim of her despotisms as well as recipient of her repentant favors.

Those who played with her, however, feared her more than they loved her, and it could not be said, even in the indulgent mood of wildest charity, that Hilda was kind to the lesser people about her. Impressed by greatness, she was capable of paying constant homage to those whose professional rank towered above hers. Little people she despised because, apparently, to be able to express her contempt emphasized her sense of

Thus it happened that on a spring morning during a rehearsal, Peter, admitting to the wings a young man whom he had been instructed by the great Taypay never to deny admission, found himself suddenly the public victim of her great wrath.

"How dare you," she screamed at Peter, hurling a distaff which she had been carrying in a dance number at him-"how dare you admit that swine to my presence? I never want to see him again!" and there in the full view of the assembled company, swung out an arm, full width, and let her hand bang resoundingly against the young doorkeeper's cheek.

It was one of those events that can me to a sleeper during nightmare; it was public humiliation of a sort that can cause the throat to close and the eyes to flash into blindness. There, in the presence of at least sixty people, many of the stage hands his personal friends, a woman, without the slightest just provocation, had slapped him in the face.

For an instant his impulse had been to leap at her and crush his fingers into her ornamental throat, but that impulse died almost as it was born. Aside from the impregnable solidity of her throne, and the power of this in mind, he directed Ashmun, the shelf, away from the crackle and her slightest word, there was only furwhite-haired skipper "You put her off | sough of the cook stove, she heard | ther indignity and humiliation and self-abasement to be gained by letting go of his wrath.

There were fifty dollars for a half month's wages due Peter, which he never claimed. There were personal objects, books, papers, small baggage lying about the office which he never returned to collect. The one idea was to get away securely, permanently, quickly from the scene of his humiliation, to forget, if possible, the fiendish onslaught against his dignity and his peace of mind.

The theater and everything pertainplanking, with the whispering breeze ing to it became anathema to the quiet-faced, unobtrusive young man, who from that day, for many a year to pray that Alan was not leading this to come, was to carry the sting from a woman's hand across his face and out that she did not want to see Alan | heart, and whose fingers, throughout the years, were to itch to throttle the white neck of Hilda Taypay.

It is, of course, difficult to hypothecate what would have been the destiny of Peter Tarbell had he remained in the atmosphere of the theater. It is, however, fair to assume he had been on the way to higher position, since his rise had been steady from call-boy to general manager of affairs of rear stage.

Be that as it may, from the day Peter walked out, his destiny fell along lesser lines. At forty he was superin tendent of a huge apartment house on the residential upper west side of New York. Eleven men worked under him, electricians, janitors, elevator boys and furnace-room men, but in reality, Peter's position, while the salary was practically that of the stage-door regime, was little above that of a managing janitor. His jobs were chiefly menial chores. Locks to be repaired on apartment doors; foyers and elevators to be kept in show state; vacant apartments to be shown to prospective tenants and altercations of one sort or another to be adjusted between his help. There were compensations, of course. He had married, meanwhile, a quiet, enormously strong and quite personable girl who had been employed as housemaid in one of the apartments of the building in which ity is puzzling.

he was employed. There were no children. Peter would have liked it, had there been. With the strange pride of the frustrated, strong Tessa would never admit her disappointment. At fifty, Tessa, with one of those quick corrosive changes which can sometimes attack the strong, began to succumb to a cruel form of rheumatism which knotted her joints so that within a period of two years she became practically bed-ridden. It was terrible to be forced to behold the slow disintegration of the magnificent body that had been Tessa's, and with the physical, there began slowly and surely to sink into desuetude the mental. A companionable, sweet-natured and helpful woman began to slump into a querulous, bed-ridden invalid, half frantic most of the time with pain; intolerant of it, all of the time. Poor Peter! The spectacle of Tessa, slipping into her invalidism was one which he could only watch with a sense of helpless despair. More and more, her predicament became a drain upon his time and energies. At fifty-five he had lost the position of superintendent over the large upper west side apartment house, and on smaller pay, and in quarters much more cramped, was presiding over the tawdry destinies of a six-story tenement house on the lower east side. This time his living quarters were two rooms below the level of the sidewalk, and his monthly stipend less than half of what it had been in the larger building. And yet in some ways life was easier. The little apartment he shared with the now completely bedridden Tessa, meant fewer hours to devote to the chores of keeping the lousehold moving.

And yet, there was about the environment of this house something so depressing that it seemed to Peter, struggling always with the problem of keeping afloat the sinking spirits of Tessa, as if the rows of days were simply too drab to face. It was not alone his own plight, but day after day there marched before his troubled eyes the woes of the poverty stricken, the lame, the halt, the blind, who dwelt around them. Evictions, for reasons of poverty or sickness, were not unusual in the house where he acted in the capacity of janitor-of-allwork. Usually this unsavory task fell

It was a grim, bitter job, this business of being janitor to the povertystricken families of the building. Sickness lurked under that roof, crime, grime and sometimes even hunger. One old woman, as a matter of fact, had been found dead in her rear apartment of a simple complaint easily diagnosed. Hunger. Little wonder that Tessa, who had always been sensitive to-pain of others, lay there not only drenched in her own misery, but seeming to feel, with the antennae of her ntuition, the poverty that lay everywhere around her. Babies cried in the tenements at night. Late unsteady footsteps lurched upstairs. Women in labor pains cried out in the agony of bringing more life into these lusterless homes. From time to time there sped in horror through the dank and narrow house news of a child run over by a truck; the wage-earning head of a household falling from a scaffolding; the son of a household turning gangster and fac-

Lean mean years filled with terror of one sort of another, but through it all Peter and Tessa clinging fast to the murky nest of the two rear rooms they called home and as time moved on Peter becoming more and more obsessed with the fear of losing his job through having to give more and more time to the task of tending Tessa.

The night that he found a ruin of a woman propped up against the door as he was about to enter his apartment proved a memorable one. She was a gin-fogged creature with deep ruts of suffering and dissipation down the still white flesh of her face. A wreck of a woman with a strange suggestion of splendor left to her.

It was while he was picking her up to carry her out to the curb and turn her over to the mercies of the corner policeman, that recognition came to Peter. Recognition, and a flash of anger so blinding that it seemed to him for a moment that here, now nothing could prevent his digging talons into the throat of the creature before him. Pent up in him, all through the years, were passions about to be released. Here in his arms a derelict, a remnant, a skeleton of comic opera, was the object of his lifetime of hatred. .

Somehow again, once more, it did not work out that way. Peter's talons did not sink in to blemish that last remnant of the beauty of Hilda's throat. He has given her roof, and in her befogged way she knows that a fanitor, whom at heart she despises for being a menial has come to her

There are two women for Peter to tend now. The helpless Tessa and the curious temperamental derelict whom they have taken into their home. Sometimes she sings and creates the furore of cracked melody and pitiful dance in the little tenement they all share together.

Sometimes she rises in wrath and strikes the old fanitor whose humble lot she shares.

Substitute for Fairies in Eugenic Teachings

When eugenists meet we always seek out their reports. In a world without fairies, where even the children are taught really-truly stories about tractors and sewing machines, the eugenists' discussions provide a refershing bit of romance, an escape from dull realism into a world of fancy-free.

Eugenists, Prof. Harry Overstreet told the other eugenists recently, must determine what types to perpetuate-"warriors, esthetics, little angels, big business men, well-mus cled men or leaders." (What does he mean by "leaders") And boys and girls looking for mates should seek out "creatively intelligent good sports"-to which another eugenic professor added, for some strange reason, "with a sense of humor." We can imagine a pair of young eugenists sitting in the moonlight in June whispering softly: "Darling! "Yes, dearest." Darling, I love you but-" "But what, dearest?" "But darling, I'm not sure that you are really creatively intelligent." "Well, I love you, and that proves I'm intelligent." "Yes, dear, but after all. you take me as I am, and that is not really creative. Besides-" "Besides what?" "Besides, dearest, are you sure you're the type best fitted to perpetuate the best of the race? You know you are sometimes just a little bit, er, just a wee mite-" (the voice grows louder). "A wee mite what?" "Well, I dunno, but perhaps just a trifle too overmuscled for the the United States, per average acre, new world order?"

Or perhaps we can't imagine anything of the sort. But then, if we cheapest land, according to Collier's did not read about them in the pa- Weekly, is in Montana, where it has pers, we never would believe in the decreased 28 per cent during this eugenists either.—New York Herald same period.

Immortal "Will's" Father

Feared Process Servers Prosecution of Councillor Cox, of Manchester, for not attending church on Sunday, was founded on the Sunday Observance act of 1677. But the law of England about compulsory church observance was the same a hundred years earlier, when Shakespeare's father was reported to the Stratford authorities "for not com minge monethlie to Churche accordinge to hir Majesties lawes."

But it was not lack of piety so much as lack of pelf that kept John Shakespeare away from the parish church. For in the record, there is this note appended to his name and the names of eight other offenders: "It is sayde that these laste nine coom not to Church for feare of process for debtte."

It was on September 25, 1592, that this record was made-just a year before the publication of "Venus and Adonis," described by Shakespeare in his dedication as "The first heire of my invention."-London Morning

Firmly Planted

An East side resident had carefully prepared the soil preparatory to setting out some very choice rose bushes in his yard. He mixed the soil thoroughly with what he presumed to be fertilizer, watered the roots and took great precautions in order that the roses would have every advantage. But despite his care. within an unusually short time, the roses withered and died. Eager to know the cause of their death he went out to investigate. He took his spade and attempted to loosen the soil about them, but much to his surprise and disgust discovered that instead of fertilizing the roses, he had by mistake used cement and placed his roses in a concrete base. -Indianapolis News.
