AMUSEMENTS

Tim Murphy, in a new comedy, new character, and his usual carefully elected environment of company, set tings and dressing is the promise for Saturday, October 2, at the Wichita Theatre. In this instance there is added interest in the inrtoduction of a new dramatist. The new play is "Cupld and the Dollar," and the new author is Charles Jeffrey, a discovery of Mr. Murphy's and critics declare that he has furnished the comedian with the happiest role of his career at the same time that he has in his very first play achieved a hoge success. Mr Murphy's triumph in 'Cupid and the Dollar' has brought Mr. Jeffrey enough years orders to keep him busy for the next three years. Mr. Murphy reserved the refusal of his next two plays. "Cupid and the Dollar" indicates in its title the universal topic which animates it, the struggle between love and money. This world old theme is applied to a remantic instance of international marriage and to an equally interesting phase of American life, the habit of American parents educating their children and neglecting themselves. Mr. Murphy's role is that of a native of an amusing and lovable type, one who has sprung from the good brown earth, with a big heart and his native wit acutely developed. A large company appears with Mr. Murphy, for the cast of Cupid and the Dollar is not a short one. At the head of Mr. Murphy's supporting players is Miss Dorothy Sherrod, whose charm and alent have endeared her to a large circle of theatregoers. Every member of the cast of 'Cupid and the Dollar' will be seen in the role that he created. Mr. Murphy has consented to give a special matinee on Saturday afternoon at 2:30 at which time he will present his great comedy success 'Old Innocence.'' Seats will be on sale tomorrow morning at 8:30 at Bean & Huey's

RESOURCES

The Denton Record and Chronicl criticises the University of Texas for raising its entrance standards again and complains that by the time a young man has completed his prepara-tion for his life's chosen work, he is twenty-five or twenty-six years old. We must say that it sounds peculiar for a paper in an intellectual city like Denton, to object to anything in the way of educational advancement. The goal of university training is not the diploma, despite the popular notion, but is an education. Diplomas are cheap enough; a certain New York man will get you one from any college that you name, almost, for a consideration. But the training and culture that are results of a real university education are cheap at any cost, even when it takes twenty-five ears to secure them.

PROFESSIONAL ADS SUGGESTIONS GIVEN FOR SECURING CENSUS DATA

Washington, Sept. 27.-The general trend of their suggestions concerning the United States Census schedule to secure the data relative to manufactures is indicated in an interview obtained with Prof. Carroll W. Doten, one of the group of college professors of economics and manufacturing experts who have been advising Director Durand of the Bureau of the Census concerning the form and scope of the inquiries to be asked by the special agents making the canvass beginning January 1st next for the manufactures census period, which is the present calendar year 1909. Prof. Doten is secretary of the American Statistical Association and also is assistant professor of economics in the Massachu-Or. Burnside's Residence.....No. 12 setts Institute of Technology. He is Dr. Walker's Residence No. 267 also a specialist in railroad economics ry systematizing and social investi-

> "From 1810 when the first attempt was made to secure data concerning industry," said Prof. Doten, "one of the most difficult problems involved in census taking has been the census of manufactures. At each recurring decennial period, except in 1820, when no provision was made for securing statisticts of industry, more and more elaborate schedules were prepared, as the growing importance and diversity of the industries of the country seemed to require, until 1890, when the system almost broke down of its own

"Since that time a reaction has set in and there has been a movement in the direction of the greater simplicity. This has taken two forms, as exemplifled in the census of 1900 and 1905. in 1900, the schedule was simplified materially by the elimination of cer-Office over E. 5 Morris & Co.'s Drug of others, notably the inquiries in regard to capital and employees. In 1905, few changes were made in the schedule, but the scope of the census was limited to those establishments conducted under what is known as the Rooms 2 and 3 in Vreeland Building. factory system, exclusive of the so-

"Both of the se methods of simplification have been made necessary by the changing character and by the growing size and complexity of our manufacturing industries. The tardisystem with the fact that the factory systemlong ago supplanted the household or neighborhood industries of an earlier stage of our national development has been taken note of in census work was in part the result of a desire to make each census comparable, so far as possible, with preceding censuses.. There was also the desire that the census manufacturers should account for all production not included in the extractive industries or in trade and transportation. The attempt to system long ago supplanted the housewas never successful, and as they became of less relative importance the reasons for abandoning the attempt made a stronger appeal to Congress and the census officials.

"The act providing for the taking of the 13th decennial census limits its scope practically to the same field as that covered by the quinquennial census of 1905. The inquiries within this tield include the name, location, and ownership of each establishment; the character of the industry; the number of officers and employees, with the total amount of their salaries and wages; quantity and cost of materials; miscellaneous expenses; quantity and amount of power used. The only thing required now is to perfect the method of securing the data within these narrower limits.

"It is to this task that the committee of experts on manufactures, called together at the Census Bureau by Director Durand, have devoted their particular attention. Recognizing the desirability of preserving comparability, they have been loath to suggest radical changes in either the form or contents of the inquiries included in the general schedule of manufactures They have, moreover, been influenced by the obvious necessity of limiting the expense and effort required to obtain the data in the field. As users of the census figures in recearch and Fire Arms, Sporting Goods oom work, they have also realized the importance of the early publication of the result of the census and they have been especially anxious to facilitate in every way possible without sacrificing thoroughness

WICHITA FALLS TEXAS

'It is perhaps too early to announce specific changes, as the tentative schedule will probably be tested in the field before its final adoption, but it may be safe to speak of the general They call for definite figures from the books and pay rolls of manufacturers where this does not involve too much trouble and when the inquiry cannot be regarded as unduly inquisitorial. In order that this should not involve added labor in the filling out of schedules it has been found necessary to reduce the number of inquiries or sub-inquiries. The theory upon which this has been done is toat three or four accurately determined figures are better as a basis of deduction than a dozen estimates which in many cases must necessarily be merely guesses.

"In some cases it has seemed desirable to re-classify the items already included in an inquiry. This does not in the least interfere with the comparability of the totals, but it serves to bring out certain tendencies in the industrial world which the former methods of presentation were found to

"While it is the primary aim of a census now, as it has always been, to take an inventory of the nation's resources and productive capacity, still it seems desirable to secure other economic and social data, at least as a by-product of this great enterprise. The United States Census has come to be regarded as a model the world over and other countries are falling in line with its methods. Its reports are more and more being used as a storehouse of material by economics and social investigators, not only in this country but abroad. In view of these things the committee have felt that no backward step should be taken at the present time, and that every legitimate effort should be put forth to secure ac-curate and complete data in regard to wages, hours of labor, and regularity of employment, as evidences of the well-being of industrial laborers.

'Quite as important on the other hand, however, are the inquiries show. ing the improvements in machinery and in the methods of organization, which make it possible to utilize our natural resources to the best advant-age and with the least waste.
