POLICE SEEKING ASSAULTER OF GIRL

ROBBINS ON WAY TO SEATTLE

By United Press.
FORT WORTH, June 30.—With their all-white monoplane looming like a phantom under the full moon that shone, Reg Robbins and H. S. Jones streaked away at 4:50 a. m. on their flight to Tokio.
The fliers had 325 gallons of gasoline aboard and said they would attempt to reach Seattle, non-stop, by tonight.
The refueling Ford plane, piloted by Jimmy Mattern, followed Robbins into the air.
The ship rose sluggishly with only a few gulls at the south end of the field.
Mattern said he would try to reach Bismarck, N. D., today. Accompanied by Robbins' mechanic, he will proceed to Fairbanks, Alaska, where the Lockheed will receive its first mid-air refueling.
Robbins said the take-off from Seattle will be made as soon as the refueling ship reaches Fairbanks.

Awaits News of Flying Husband

Perhaps the most eager and anxious reader of Oklahoma City newspapers is Mrs. Wiley Post, above, who waits at her home there for daily press reports on the progress of her famous husband, who is flying around the world with Harold Gatty. She is confident he will make the flight in 10 days.

TWO MEN CAUGHT IN SEWER

By United Press.
WICHITA, Kan., June 30.—All hope was abandoned here for the lives of the two men who were overcome by gas and washed into a big sewer main south of the city this morning.
Crews of firemen equipped with gas masks were searching for the bodies and a ditch digging machine was tearing into the earth midway between two manholes so the sewer may be opened and more searching parties enter the main.
The two men are George Durham and Oscar Linquist, both married.
The two were overcome by gas when they yanked a sandbag plug when another was being connected. They fell forward into the main sewer, washed away by the strong current. Fellow workers tried to reach them but the gas drove them out.

Modern Statesman Goes by Air

Even statesmen are air-minded these days. And here you see Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson, left, boarding a transport plane at Washington for a trip to New York, to catch the liner Conte Grande for Naples, where he will negotiate with Italian leaders in connection with President Hoover's proposed debtors' holiday.

POST AND GATTY ARE NEAR GOAL

By United Press.
FAIRBANKS, Alaska, June 30. Wiley Post and Harold Gatty, round-the-world fliers, left here today at 3:20 a. m., Fairbanks time, en route to New York.
The fliers were bound for Edmonton, Alberta, and their first stop in the cross-continent dash.
The Oklahoma oil worker and the Australian navigator landed on the North American continent last night near Nome after pushing through fog along a treacherous route from Siberia; sailed on to Fairbanks, took only a few hours' sleep there and were away at 7:20, central standard time, today.
They had allotted themselves 10 days to fly around the world and when they set out from this Alaskan city this morning they already had completed an estimated 11,600 of their 15,000-mile flight.
Barring accident the ship and its crew will end their aerial odyssey at New York sometime Wednesday, having banded the world in eight days, one-tenth the time it took the hurrying Thimoos and a little more than a third of the time it took the Graf Zeppelin, record-holder to date for the long trip, with a time of slightly less than 22 days.

Ex-Crown Prince As He Is Now

Had the World War taken an opposite turn with the Germans victorious, this man would have been a powerful figure today instead of a mere gentleman of leisure. This is the latest photo of the former Crown Prince Wilhelm of Germany, eldest son of the ex-emperor, announced today by Burt Johnson, adjutant of the Carl Harnes post of the American legion.
Gaming, liquor traffic, and all the other vices that flourish in an oil town were in full bloom when the jail opened, but now Police Chief W. A. Bill Dial, a former Texas ranger, and his assistants have things under control.
The jail is a show-place, which looks like the "jaws" of gold rush towns in the old days. There are no bars—only logs. But the place is the coolest spot in town, for there is a wide space between the logs.
The men's ward contains cots and 13 chain fetters, and the women's ward three cots and three chain fetters. Besides having to get loose from a chain and break down the door, a prisoner would have to climb a high board fence surmounted by barbed wire to escape.

THREE OTHERS THREATENED BY SAME MEN

By United Press.
PORT ARTHUR, June 30.—Police were up in arms today searching for a man who criminally assaulted a 9-year-old girl and attempted to assault three others early this morning.
Four men were in jail and the victims will attempt to identify one of them as their assailant, but meanwhile police were searching every section of town for additional suspects.
The first attempted attack was at 2:30 a. m., when a 13-year-old girl awakened to find a man standing over her. She screamed and the man ran. Similar experiences were had by a 10-year-old girl and an 11-year-old child. All lived in the same neighborhood and the attempted attacks occurred within an hour.
At 4:30 the man entered the room of the 9-year-old girl and covering her mouth with his hand to prevent her screaming, assaulted her. Her condition is serious.

SENTIMENT IS DIVIDED OVER MORATORIUM

By United Press.
AUSTIN, June 30.—To one man President Hoover's debt plan sounds like rank politics, to another like constructive business.
Here is one man whose opinion is valuable because he served as an assistant secretary of the United States treasury in Woodrow Wilson's administration. It is none the less impressive because he happened to be a Hooverer voter three years ago because of dislike for the democratic leader's views.
Thomas B. Love stresses the idea that Texas will benefit from the market improvements due to the debt vacation proposal, the industrial section of the country, where the big incomes are made, will pay most of the bill.
He doubts the question that the United States must chip in and pay the bill to meet the government's needs the year of debt interregnum, and the interest charges arising from the extension. But he says the accession of new business and better prices will many times over pay the bill; and that the bill, in the form of higher income taxes, will touch the industrial and financial section most profiting. Ten per cent already has been added to the prospective value of the Texas cotton and wheat crop—for once while the crop is still in the farmers' hands.
That, in Senator Love's words, "is something."

WEST TEXAS OIL MAN IS A SUICIDE

By United Press.
DALLAS, June 30.—Grief over the accidental death of his 10-year-old son was blamed today for the suicide last night of L. P. Hammond, prominent West Texas oil man, rancher and air enthusiast.
Leaving his wife and two children chatting in the living room of their hotel suite here, Hammond, 45, entered the bathroom. His wife heard a pistol shot and rushed in at the time of his death.
Hammond, whose home is in Wichita Falls, was visiting this city on business. His wife knew of no business tangles which might have upset him, but declared he had been despondent since the death of his son, April 10. L. P. Hammond Jr. was killed when the automobile he was driving plunged into a ditch near Wichita Falls. Hammond was formerly in charge of the Wichita Falls airport and two airplanes.

FRENCH GAME TABLES REVEAL LIVELY PLAY

By United Press.
PARIS.—If the "kitties" of the gambling tables are any criterion, prosperity must be just around the corner.
After two very lean years, the board of directors of the Society of Sea Baths at Monte Carlo almost gloated in reporting to stockholders that since April 1 the profits of the green tables have been 5,000,000 francs more than during 1930.
The Frank Jay Gould casinos at the casino resort that Germans have taken the seats around the table vacated by Americans when Wall street went through its convulsions.
So far this summer Deauville and La Touquet have been very little exciting play. The warm sun has filled the beaches and the players seem to prefer the golden sands and beach bars to gambling.
All in all, the French government and French stockholders in the 169 gambling casinos at watering places have lost 75,000,000 francs from the level of 1928, the banner year. But a comparison of kitties back as far as 1922 shows that gambling profits are 300 per cent greater than 10 years ago, although they are now the smallest of any year since 1925.

IL DUCE ORDERS ALL FACISTS INTO UNIFORMS

By STEWART BROWN, United Press Staff Correspondent.
ROME.—Premier Benito Mussolini has ordered that effective from Oct. 28 of this year, tenth anniversary of the fascist march on Rome, all fascists must wear a prescribed uniform for official gatherings, parades and party manifestations.
The uniform resembles, in many respects, the uniform now worn by the fascist militia. Il Duce stipulated that the uniform must be sportingly cut from dark gray material, with a type of riding breeches completed by black stockings, leggings, or leather puttees.
The shirt will be black with a black scarf. No coat will be worn in summer. The hat, made of gray material, will resemble the hats with the cocked brim worn by the Alpine soldiers. Commencing with the tenth anniversary of the march on Rome, this uniform will be obligatory for all members of the party.
Add to Impressiveness.
The new uniforms are expected to make even more impressive the celebration of fascism's greatest anniversary. Already many loyal fascists are sporting their new garb at official gatherings and parades.
Coincident with these dress orders, the fascist party issued instructions that women's fascio, or fascist centers, were to be organized in every town where there are 10 loyal women fascists. The orders read that only fascist women over 22 and of "highest conduct and certain fascist faith" can participate in the feminine fascio.
All Have Chance.
This extension of women fascist centers to towns where a minimum of 10 fascist women reside is in keeping with the party's desire to afford Italian women every opportunity to collaborate in the party's program. Already there are many loyal women members of the party but so far none has been named to the fascist grand council.
The new order practically completes a series of fascist organizations, starting with the Balilla for young boys, and the Piccola Italiana for young girls, through the various stages to full membership in the fascist party. The women's fascio are to assist in the training and education of the children.
According to figures just issued by the fascist headquarters there are 1,604,616 Italian boys and girls under training in fascist youth organizations, an increase of 122,551 over the previous month.

TEXAS OIL TOWN KEEPS ITS NEW LOG JAIL BUSY

By United Press.
GLADEWATER, Texas.—This newest incorporated town in Texas boasts one of the busiest jails, as well as the most unusual.
Built of logs, the jail was opened May 9, less than a month after this oil town, 14 miles west of Longview, was incorporated. In less than a month after its "house-warming" 153 prisoners had passed in and out of its doors, and $1,145 had been collected in fines by corporation court, which has met every week-day morning since the jail opened.
Gaming, liquor traffic, and all the other vices that flourish in an oil town were in full bloom when the jail opened, but now Police Chief W. A. Bill Dial, a former Texas ranger, and his assistants have things under control.
The jail is a show-place, which looks like the "jaws" of gold rush towns in the old days. There are no bars—only logs. But the place is the coolest spot in town, for there is a wide space between the logs.

Veterans May Still Apply For Compensation

The article which appeared in this paper a few days ago stating that July 3 was the last day on which veterans could file claims for compensation, it was announced today by Burt Johnson, adjutant of the Carl Harnes post of the American legion.
The time limit set as July 3 applied only to those who became totally and permanently disabled to such a degree that they have been unable to pursue any gainful occupation since the time of their discharge.
Applications for compensation may be made at any time during the lifetime of the veteran, it was pointed out today.

FALL SESSION DEEMED LIKELY BY OBSERVERS

By GORDON K. SHEARER, United Press Staff Correspondent.
ATLANTA.—Provided the situation of the oil industry does not force earlier action, a special session of the Texas legislature is generally looked for this fall—probably in September or October.
Governor Ross Sterling is too well-advised by those practically wise to defer a session until next year if he determines one is necessary at all. A session next year would be necessarily political. Members planning to run for office in the summer primaries would be at the short for publicity and other advantages for their prospective races. Also the anti-administration forces would most surely use it to embarrass the administration and the governor, if he seeks re-election.
A fall session is sufficiently ahead of the next political campaign to prevent these inconveniences. The prospect that the governor will direct the legislature again to attempt congressional redistricting will give any session plenty of political fuel.
The belief that there will be a fall session is based on a number of things.
First, it is pretty generally agreed that whatever arrangements now are made regarding the East Texas oil field will be only temporary. When the situation there has been thoroughly thrashed out the state will probably adopt a permanent rule. By fall the legislature will have the advantage of a report from the oil states conference which meets in Denver Aug. 10.
Second, there will begin to be some definite idea of what the state income is going to be. It is admitted at this time that the estimates on income are highly speculative. By fall it will be reasonably apparent what the cigaret tax is going to yield.
The same is true of the changes in the method of collecting the gasoline tax. It will also show what surplus is to pay. Its tax has been increased but reports of reduction production have been current.
This financial situation is one about which the governor is most worried with the possible exception of the oil situation and he believes the two are bound together. If oil prices stay down he shows by a little calculation that the state revenue also is down for its oil tax is a percentage one.
A state highway bond issue amendment cannot be offered at a special session, though the governor is still anxious to push it. If some way to arrange it without a constitutional amendment can be found there is a possibility of it, too, helping cause a fall session.

25,000 WOMEN PLAN MEETING

By United Press.
CHICAGO.—What is believed to be the largest gathering of women in Chicago will meet here July 20, when 25,000 members of the Women's Fascist association open their international convention.
Every state in the union, as well as Canada and the Hawaiian Islands, will be represented at the six-day meeting.
It has been announced that 11,000 of the delegates will take part in the jubilee pageant which will pass in parade before city and state officials. There will be 1,000 pioneer members in this group who joined the association 25 or more years ago.
A chorus of 20,000 will be led by Roland Pease, Chicago singer, and the pageant will close with a fireworks display in Grant Park.

Eastland Man Is Injured In a Fall From Rig

Rob Lewis, 27, who was taken to the Payne Hospital at Eastland Monday about 4 o'clock in a Hamner-Barrow ambulance was reported resting easily this morning.
Lewis, who with others was unrigging a gin-pole after pulling tubing from a well on the Hamner-Barrow about three miles northeast of Eastland, sustained injuries in the chest from a fall with the gin-pole on which he was working.
The gin-pole made up of two joints on six inch pipe fell when Lewis was taking down the blocks at the top and a guy wire broke.
Lewis is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Newt Lewis, who reside northwest of Eastland a few miles. He is married.

Eastland Lions Hold Business Session Today

As there were no visitors present at the Eastland Lions club today the meeting was turned into a business session immediately after the luncheon.
A vote was taken and passed that the Lions club pay $125 for the traveling expense and hotel expense for Lion President Bill McDonald, who is to be the delegate to the Lions international meeting in Toronto, Canada, next month.
G. S. Stire, manager of the J. C. Penney company store of Eastland was unanimously elected to membership in the Lions.
A report was heard on the condition of Lion Donald Kinnaird, who was injured in a car wreck Saturday night and it was voted that the club send him a box of cigars to help pass the time during his convalescence.
Clyde D. Cox, who was initiated into the Eastland Lions club week before last, announced today that this would be his last opportunity to meet with the Eastland club as he is leaving tonight for Dallas to be connected with the Ed Maher Motor Co., Inc., there in the capacity of salesman.

Owners Take Over Wild Kilgore Well

By United Press.
KILGORE, Texas, June 30.—Owners of adjoining leases today took charge of Bell and Graddy's blicking No. 1 Daniele, employing dozens of men to bore a tunnel through parched earth in an effort to choke the flow of oil below the surface.
The court struck out certain portions of the defendant's answer including one that Miss Roberts' mother had "consumed her particularly for the trial in an effort to influence of jurors."
The court spent most of the morning hearing attorneys argue the admissibility of portions of Keel's answer to Miss Roberts' suit for breach of promise.

No Relief From Heat Wave Seen

By United Press.
CHICAGO, June 30.—The seventh day of the nation's heat wave shot temperatures up toward even more blistering levels today, advanced the death toll to more than 100 and brought predictions that relief still is at least 48 hours away.
An indication of the heat's severity was contained in reports that it slowed down railroad traffic, caused concrete highways to crack and exploded thermometers which were exposed to the sun.

"I had been visiting the Imperial prison farm, near Houston. They furnished me with a car and an efficient driver to return to Houston.

"Certainly, sir."
"You will have enough time?"

He has since been paroled.

Ring Around the Rosie!

IS AN EXTRA SESSION COMING?

All signs point to the calling of an extra session of the legislature by Governor Ross S. Sterling. Senator Walter C. Woodward of Coleman is for a drastic prorogation law. In a statement given the press he pointed to the big financial loss the people suffer by low priced oil. His figures are startling:

Under normal conditions the state received approximately $8,000,000 from the gross receipts tax on crude oil, but now, with oil at 20, 30 or 35 cents a barrel, the state's income is reduced to approximately $2,500,000 per annum. The income of the University of Texas from oil slumped from about $200,000 a month to approximately $50,000 a month, a loss of approximately $150,000 a month or more than $1,500,000 a year. He stresses that last year the oil companies paid to owners of oil land, largely farmers, more than $45,000,000 for oil royalties; more than $7,500,000 for rentals on land and probably as much as $20,000,000 for bonuses, while the wage pay roll approximated $150,000,000. All these expenditures have been reduced in prorogation "which are not only alarming but staggering." He reminds people that oil is the largest resource in Texas, Texas is the leading oil producing state and more than 100,000 families are dependent on this one business. It is a problem that concerns all the people of Texas. It is not confined to those in any way connected with the petroleum industry.

FARM PRODUCTS FOR INDUSTRY.

"The world will benefit from an agricultural surplus," Henry Ford insists in a recent interview. He works out the idea in this way:

"The pressure of surplus always forces one to find new uses for stock. When we had a corn surplus, we discovered a lot of new uses for corn fiber—we turned it into stockings, building board and corn paper.

"Pretty much all we know about wheat today is that it is something for the table—something to eat. Perhaps it is possible to do something with wheat besides eating it. Nobody seems to know definitely."

Whether anything more can be done with wheat or not, there can be no question about Mr. Ford's major argument, that "what agriculture needs is an industrial outlet." The idea is not original with him, but he seems to be the first industrial leader to take it seriously and start acting on it.

Perhaps the wheat farmers can find some crop adapted to industrial use, which can be raised on wheat lands and will provide a market more flexible, continuous and profitable than the wheat market. There must be many such potential uses for land and labor. The industrial chemists and manufacturers, more than any other group, should be able to help the farmers out of their difficulties.

AMERICA'S WORLD INTERESTS.

One of the compelling reasons for general acceptance of President Hoover's proposal for a moratorium on war debts has been its endorsement by Ambassador Dawes and Owen D. Young, the two experts who were chiefly instrumental in framing the plans under which Germany is paying reparations. Aside from a wide-spread desire to ease payments in order to improve business, there is a feeling that if these two men say Germany is in a critical situation and cannot pay at present what they laid down for her to pay, they are presumably right.

There is also a greater disposition than ever in this country to accept the view laid down by Mr. Young as the basis of action in such matters:

"America, as the greatest creditor nation, is more interested than any other in economic integration. It is inevitable that from an economic point of view she take an interest in and be concerned in the material problems and affairs of every country on the globe. Isolation to America, either economic or political, is impossible."

LEADERSHIP.

President Glenn Frank of the University of Wisconsin spoke out very plainly in his baccalaureate address, regarding the present political and economic situation.

"If we are in earnest about finding the cause of this depression," he said, "we must look elsewhere than in the reports of the certified accountants.

"The famine from which we are suffering is a famine of leadership throughout the western world.

"We have muddled through before. We shall not muddle through this time. The processes and relationships of business and government have become too technical, too sensitive, too interdependent for management by muddlers. The simpler society of our fathers could survive mediocre or tempering leadership. We need leaders blessed with an unprecedented clarity of insight and uncompromising courage of action."

We need more than leadership, too, he insists. Leaders imply followers. We must be ready to follow the true leaders when they appear.

SPEAKING OF THE JIM CROW LAW.

Now the Texas courts are asked to answer the question of whether the separate coach law applies to motor buses as well as railroad coaches, street cars and interurban cars. A woman passenger at Beaumont attempted to violate the coach law on an interurban line. She was arrested and fined $10 for riding in the compartment for white passengers. It will be for the court of criminal appeals to solve the problem. Lawmakers enact statutes, high court judges interpret the validity or nonvalidity of the enactments. This is a grand old world and the people are ever making the volume of litigation interesting as well as voluminous.

MAY BAR THE DOCTORS.

Now a proposal is being discussed by the French senate which, if adopted, will have the effect of preventing any foreigners from practicing medicine in France. It is said the existing restrictions are already severe enough and the American hospital and other similar institutions in the city of Paris are faced with the prospect of being unable some years hence to find any American doctors. Really, the physicians and surgeons of France appear to be well-organized and as powerful in securing the enactment of legislation as their American brethren in all the 48 states.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK

By EDSON R. WAITE
 Shawnee, Okla.

S. S. Schuyler, Advertising director of the New York City American, says:

"Advertising will accomplish only one thing—it will create an impression. If the impression is unfavorable, the advertiser will receive results. If the impression is unfavorable, the advertiser will not receive results. Keep that in mind when preparing copy. Ask yourself: Will this copy attract attention? Will it create a desire to purchase the product advertised? Will it create a desire to avail yourself of the service advertised should it be that type of an ad?"

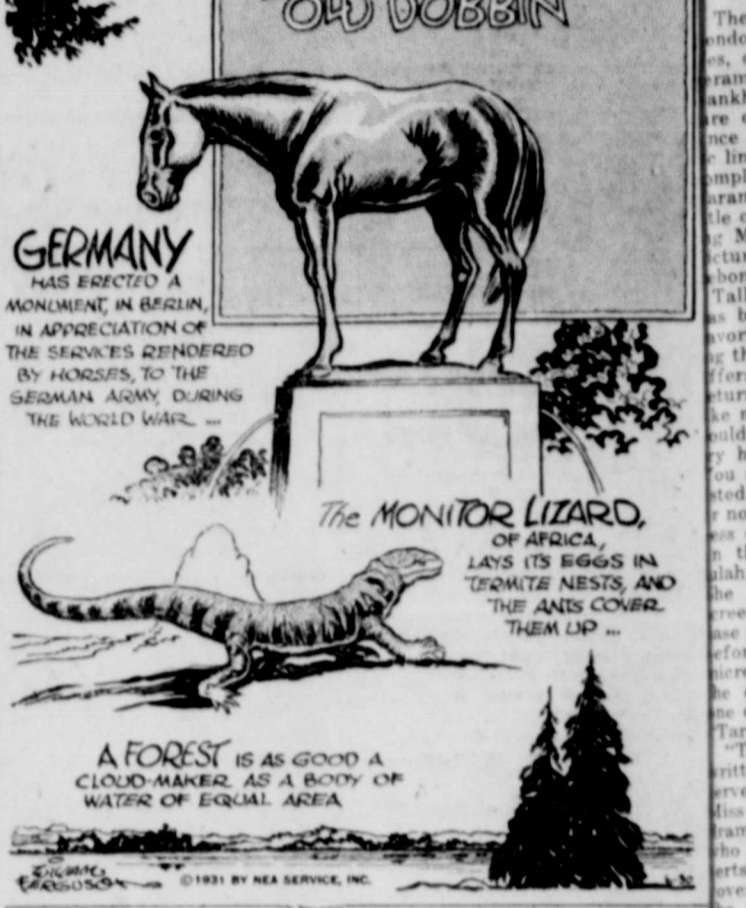

"Advertising will not sell. It will merely tell. It will bring traffic to your store and then it is your problem to do the actual selling. The wise merchant knows his public and buys most of what they want the most. Of and he advertises just that—he advertises to bring people into his store—and then he sells them reasonable and fashionable merchandise. When he advertises again the public responds because they know his merchandise is right."

"The wise merchant will not spend money to advertise merchandise that his customers have already refused to buy. He will display that part of his stock which has been left over, at marked down prices, for those who want it. But he spends his money to advertise his 'best sellers' to get traffic into the store."

"Every time a merchant advertises unwanted merchandise, he tells the public in so many words, 'I have made a mistake in buying this merchandise, so please come and take it off my hands.' Why should a merchant put a spot light on his mistakes? As a good merchant he should know what merchandise is in season and what merchandise is fashionable and then advertise only that type of merchandise."

"The public only has to make one or two trips to your store in response to your advertising to determine in their own minds whether or not you are a good merchant and a good advertiser. Don't try to be clever in your advertising unless you can back it up with real merchandise and real values. The public soon brands your store as a result of one thing—impression. Make that impression good by doing good advertising. Remember that advertising is just a tool—not a god."

Showing at Arcadia Today, Tomorrow

The American darling of the London stage has returned home, dear reader, the blond, temperamental, talented Tallulah Bankhead has succumbed to the lure of the talking screen and, once stepping from a Trans-Atlantic liner in New York, has already completed her first picture which is about to be released under the title of "Tarnished Lady." Assistant Miss Bankhead in her motion picture debut is that suave and bonair actor, Clive Brook. Tallulah Bankhead, as you know, has been London's reigning stage favorite for several seasons. During that time she refused countless offers, all of them flattering to return to the New York stage. But the most famous personalities she couldn't resist the opportunity to try her hand at motion pictures. You see, Tallulah is just as interested as you to discover whether or not she will enjoy the same success on the screen as she has had on the stage. Incidentally, Tallulah has taken to the so-called green technique with remarkable ease and, during the very first day of the impersonal camera and microphone, Miss Bankhead won the enthusiastic praise of everyone connected with the making of "Tarnished Lady," which was written by Donald Ogden Stewart, as an excellent vehicle for Miss Bankhead's debut. It is a dramatic story of a society girl who marries for convenience, deserts her husband and finally, discovering that the man she thought she loved is unworthy of her, fights desperately to regain the love of the husband she had jilted. Dramatic suspense is built up with great care and carries on to a climax that is absorbing and convincing. Tallulah Bankhead's first talking picture, "Tarnished Lady," which George Cukor directed, comes to the Arcadia theatre Tuesday and Wednesday.

Heart of Liane by MABEL McELLIOTT

BEGIN HERE TODAY Liane Barrett, 18 and beautiful, lives in a cramped New York apartment with her mother, Cass Barrett, a rather faded actress. One hot night Liane goes to dinner with Molly Cronin, a neighbor, and two of Molly's men friends. The two men quarrel and one is shot. Liane, frantic, sends for her mother who arrives and convinces Shane McDermid, the young policeman in charge, that the girl is innocent of wrongdoing. That night at the theater where Cass appears Liane encounters a handsome stranger who speaks her name. Cass receives an offer to play summer stock at a Long Island theater of which wealthy Mrs. Cleopatra is a patron. Liane is to work in the box office, sharing duties with Muriel Ladd, pretty society girl. Elsie Minter, ingenue, introduces Liane to Clive Cleopatra, son of the theater patron. Shane McDermid comes to tell Liane the man wounded in the gun fire will recover. Muriel Ladd invites Liane to her home and there the girl again meets the handsome stranger. His name is Van Robard. He takes Liane home. When Cass learns this she is excited and makes Liane promise to have nothing more to do with him. Mrs. Cleopatra asks Cass to let Liane spend the winter with her and Cass promises to consider this. Chuck Desmond, newspaper man and admirer of Muriel, is at the theater and he and Muriel drive away. Van Robard declares they have eloped, and starts after the couple, taking Liane with him.

"I'll wait until you're safely in," Van said, helping her from the car.

the side road, now Mrs. Smither's little white house blurred in the dimness ahead. "I'll wait till you're safely in," he said, helping her out. "Have you a key?" Liane glanced apprehensively toward the darkened windows. Odd that mother's light was not burning. The whole house was apparently asleep, blanketed in the hush of country stillness. "Tell me," she whispered softly, impelled by who knows what inner urgency. "How did you know my name that night at the theater in town—the first time I saw you?" She felt she had to know. After all she might never see him again. "Sweet child!" His voice caressed her and she thrilled to the timbre of it. "Sweet curious one," went on that deep, strangely persuasive voice. "I wondered how long it would be before you would ask that." "Now you're laughing at me!" pouted Liane. She felt a strong arm go around her suddenly. Liane put up her two slim brown young hands to ward him off. He let her go as suddenly as he had touched her but not before her fingers had felt the strong heart of him beating under that rough tweed coat. "Don't be afraid!" he said softly. "You're such an infant." She could not see his face now, only the glimmer of those humorous deep-set eyes. "I knew your name because I had asked Mrs. Cleopatra the day before as we drove past you on the street. You were coming out of the theater with another girl. You stopped to get a dog." There's no mystery about it, then," Liane drew suddenly feeling rather foolish. "None at all. Mrs. Cleopatra's a sort of cousin of mine. She was telling me about this theater venture and I was driving her down to see Vernon. That's all. I thought—no, I won't tell you what I thought when I saw you." Liane felt a little pulse throbbing and pounding in her throat. "Do tell me," she pleaded. "I can't sleep tonight until I know." She turned her face to him in the darkness, like a flower all fragrance and delight. The man stared back at her a full moment before he replied. Where he spoke his voice was roughened with feeling. "I thought," he began haltingly, "that you were the rarest thing I had seen in many a moon. I thought you looked like something infinitely and infinitely lovely to be loved. I thought all sorts of strange, old-fashioned, knightly thoughts. Like wanting to own a glove you had worn or a rose you had thrown away. I thought—but why go on? The night wanes and an anxious parent waits you above."

LESSON-SERMON GIVEN.

The subject of the lesson-sermon was "Christian Science" in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, Sunday, June 28. "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee," was the golden text; from Isaiah 60:1. The lesson-sermon included the following passage from the Bible (Isaiah 9:2): "The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light; they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined." This paragraph from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, was also included in the service (page 546): "Christian Science is dawning upon a material age. The great spiritual facts of being, like rays of light, shine in the darkness, though the darkness, comprehending them not, may deny their reality. The proof that the system stated in this book is Christianity scientific resides in the good this system accomplishes, for it cures on a divine demonstrable Principle which all may understand."

CHAPTER I

Where's that girl? Where is she? raged Mrs. Ladd, storming up and down the little Louis XVI sitting room. "Ingrate, wretch!" The words tumbled from her twisted scarlet mouth. Her long, jeweled fingers were in and out of the chain of glittering stones she wore, torturing it, threatening to tear it asunder. Liane stood in the doorway with Van Robard behind her, watching Mrs. Ladd with a dread sort of fascination. Up and down she stormed, the petals of her leaf-green frock billowing out before her, her Auburn hair, curled and erikling like Bacchus locks, topping her tall figure absurdly. "When I'd warned her—" she screamed, her breath coming now unexpectedly tonight," she cried, fixing both people in the doorway with that baffled, pallid glare. "To find Grimes all dithering and muttering about her having gone off in the roadster with that fellow. No word to anyone, if you please! Supposed to be at her grandmother's and no one there knowing anything at all. Idiots, all of them!" Van Robard advanced. "We've scoured the shore road," he told her. "We've been everywhere. No trace of the car." Mrs. Ladd drummed on a marble topped table with vermillion-tipped fingers. The emeralds on her bosom flashed balefully as her breath came and went. "And it's—what? Half-past one?" "Nearly that," Van corroborated solemnly, consulting his wrist watch. "Oh, do something. Do something!" the woman wailed, collapsing suddenly. "There must be something. Why can't I think what to do?" "The papers'll have it tomorrow," she muttered, lifting her head again. "Nice, slimy mess they will make of it. And what's her father doing? That's what I'd like to know. Oh, yes, if he'd spend a bit of his time at home, instead of trailing chorus girls, it mightn't have happened. HE was supposed to be looking after the child." Van looked uncomfortable. Liane ventured to say timidly in the pause. "Would you mind taking me home now? My mother will be terribly worried. I didn't have time to leave her a message. We rushed off so quickly." "Yes, yes, go, all of you. Of course. The sinking ship," cried the woman in the gold chair, wailing. "You, Van, run along and forget me and my troubles. She lifted streaming eyes to his concerned face. "I had no business, Adele, in the first place, to drag this poor child into it," he began uncomfotably. "Only, I thought she might be able to help us, give us some clue." "I'll come back," he said, in a lower tone. "Never fear, I'll not desert you." He took Liane's hand. She was trembling now, with anxiety and excitement. When she had rushed off into the stary night at Van Robard's side she had completely forgotten the promise given her mother not 24 hours ago. What was it she had said? Oh, yes, "I'll cut him dead if I pass him on the road." Well, those had been light, said words, lightly spoken. Because of course she could not treat this handsome man so cavalierly. She found a strange, deep attraction in his looks, his low-toned queries, the pressure of his brown hand. When he had asked her to go with him, to hunt for Muriel Ladd she had gone as unresistingly as a child might have. Villain he might be but he showed no cloven hooves to her. However, now it was well past midnight and her mother probably lay shivering with dread, waiting for news of her. "I was a wretch to drag you off that way," Robard said contritely, setting her in the car. "But I was sure Muriel had stopped to see you, probably had confided her plans. I couldn't think what else to do." "It's all right," Liane said uncomfotably. She knew it wasn't all right but it did no harm to reassure him. The big car bowed smoothly along. Now they were in

Interesting Meeting of Circles Held Monday Afternoon
The Martha Stewart and Bennett Circles of the Methodist Woman's Missionary Society met Monday afternoon at the church at 3:30 o'clock. "Wonderful Word of Life" was sung as an opening song. Mrs. G. W. Shamer-led prayer. A short business session was presided over by the president, Mrs. Ed Wilman. The bulletin of Missionary News was presented in the form of a play with Misses J. E. Hickman, T. J. Collier, Guy Parker, Kelly, B. McGlamery, and T. J. Haley taking part. Among the interesting bits of missionary news may be noted in the following: A new church building in the city of Leige, Belgium was recently dedicated by Bishop Darlington. It is a beautiful commodious structure and gives a permanent home to Methodism in this important Belgian city. Chief Tunda, the Batatela tribe, in the heart of Africa, has been converted in a Congo mission during a sweep revival there. Three hundred others have also been saved. The board of missions invested in Goodwill Industries the sum of $4,250 and as a result, paid $66,684 in cash wages to the poor and unemployed. This more than $15 for every dollar spent. Mr. Ed Craham had charge of the devotional part of the program. "Sweet Hour of Prayer" was sung. Mrs. Graham read a passage from Christ's nativity. Mrs. W. P. Lee offered prayer. Mrs. Wayne Jones sang the fourth lesson in the series "Great Souls at Prayer." She told in simple, vivid language the temptations of Jesus and need and use of prayer. In conclusion she brought the application close to the heart of each of present. "Take Time To Be Holy" was sung and the meeting was closed with prayer by Mrs. Taylor.
Those present were: Miss Stubblefield, Ed Wilman, Daveport, Ed Graham, W. W. Kelly, M. Collier, W. B. Collier, W. W. Jones, Grady Pipkin, B. E. McGlamery, Frank Jones, T. J. Haley, F. L. Drago, J. C. Stephen, J. J. Hickman, T. L. Pagg, T. M. Johnson, W. P. Leslie, G. W. Shearer, Parker, O'Steen, Taylor and B. Collier.

Consider your Adam's Apple!!
Don't Rasp Your Throat With Harsh Irritants

"Reach for a LUCKY instead"

Consider the Garden of Eden. When that old serpent put Eve up to the idea of handing Adam an apple, he may have been doing them both a good turn—for where would we be today, ladies and gentlemen, without our Adam's Apple. If we didn't have our Adam's Apple, we couldn't sing, we couldn't even speak. For your Adam's Apple is your Larynx—your voice box—it contains your vocal chords. So—Consider your Adam's Apple. Be careful in your choice of cigarettes. Remember—the serpent in the smokers' Garden of Eden—harsh irritants are present in all raw tobaccos. Don't rasp your throat with harsh irritants. Reach for a LUCKY instead. Remember, LUCKY STRIKE is the only cigarette in America that through its exclusive "TOASTING" Process expels certain harsh irritants present in all raw tobaccos. These expelled irritants are sold to manufacturers of chemical compounds. They are not present in your LUCKY STRIKE. And so we say, "Consider your Adam's Apple."

PICKING YOUR RIGHT JOB.....

By L. SETON LINDSAY
Vice President, New York Life Insurance Co.

As Told to J. V. FitzGerald of the American School of the Air
The successful insurance agent needs these qualifications:
FIRST: Integrity—honesty. No permanent success can be achieved in any line without the fundamental requirements of integrity and character.
SECOND: The ability and willingness to work hard without too much supervision. An insurance company provides instruction for new agents, but their success will depend on their own initiative and energy.
THIRD: When you have worked hard and landed a big policy and you are counting on your commissions to pay the rent and grocery bills, which are coming in, and the company writes you that your case is turned down, it takes real courage to smile, put on your hat and go right after another case. Courage is an outstanding trait of character among successful life insurance men and women.
FOURTH: A little capital, not necessarily a bang account, but credit, or backing, or help at home, which will enable the new agent to keep going for two or three months while he is getting his business started.
Business experience is valuable, because it affords an opportunity to acquire a knowledge of human nature and of how to deal with all sorts of people.
The insurance business gives the ambitious youngster an opportunity to go to the front quickly. He will be judged not by his age but by the results of his work, and if he can accomplish what older men are doing he earns just as much as they do.
You young people are the men and women of tomorrow. Thousands of you will eventually occupy high positions in the business world. Many of you will enter the life insurance business. Which of you will be the successful ones? Without any question it will be those of you who possess in large measure the qualities I spoke of in the beginning—integrity, the ability to manage yourselves, and courage.

BALLOON LANDS IN CITY

LILLIE.—A balloon, piloted by members of the Northern Aeronautical Association, was forced down in the heart of this city, due to bad weather conditions. Neither the pilots, nor any of the spectators, were injured, but three bystanders who helped the balloonists out of the car were overcome by gas fumes. The balloon came down in a street near the market square and lay poised on the street car wires for some time. It finally sank slowly to the street, the bag being slightly damaged.

Bridge "Suicide" Leaves In Auto

WASHINGTON.—Washington's "million-dollar" bridge, from which many persons have leaped to their death, has become so famous that police rush there at the slightest mention of the absence of the "suicide."
Recently several police patrols dashed to the bridge, sirens screeching, only to be baffled by the absence of the "suicide."
It happened when Clarence A. Aspinwall, president of a storage company, stalled his car on the bridge. He went in search of a tow truck. A passerby, having read of the number of persons that had jumped from the bridge, decided the occupant of the "dead" automobile had "committed suicide."
He called police. People came from all directions and soon a line of cars the length of the bridge was tangled into a mass.
Police searched for the body. Soon Aspinwall returned to get his car. He was told a man had leaped from the bridge. He aided police.
Congestion became so bad that the officers ordered everyone off the bridge. In this way, they thought, the abandoned machine would be left. After the bridge had been cleared, they approached Aspinwall's car and began to take down the license plate numbers.

The Heart of Liane by AABEL McELLIOTT

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Liane Barrett, 18 and beautiful, lives in a cramped New York apartment with her mother, Cass Barrett, a rather faded actress. One hot night Liane goes to dinner with Molly Cronin, a neighbor, and two of Molly's men friends. The two men quarrel and one is shot. Liane, frantic, sends for her mother who arrives and convinces Shane McDermid, the young policeman in charge, that the girl is innocent of wrongdoing. That night at the theater where Cass appears Liane encounters a handsome stranger who speaks her name.

Cass receives an offer to play summer stock at a Long Island theater of which wealthy Mrs. Cleespaugh is a patron. Liane is to work in the box office, sharing duties with Muriel Ladd, pretty society girl. Elsie Minter, ingenue, introduces Liane to Clive Cleespaugh, son of the theater patron. Shane McDermid comes to tell Liane the man wounded in the gun fire will recover.

Muriel Ladd invites Liane to her home and there the girl again meets the handsome stranger. His name is Van Robard. He takes Liane home. When Cass learns this she is excited and makes Liane promise to have nothing more to do with him. Mrs. Cleespaugh asks Cass to let Liane spend the winter with her and Cass promises to consider this. Chuck Desmond, newspaper man and admirer of Muriel, calls at the theater and he and Muriel drive away. Van Robard declares they have eloped, and starts after the couple, taking Liane with him.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER VI

"Where's that girl? Where is she?" raged Mrs. Ladd, storming up and down the little Louis XVI sitting room. "Ingrate, wretch! The words tumbled from her twisted scarlet mouth. Her long, jeweled fingers went in and out of the chain of glittering stones she wore, torturing it, threatening to tear it asunder. Liane stood in the doorway with Van Robard behind her, watching Mrs. Ladd with a dread sort of fascination. Up and down she stormed, the petals of her leaf-green frock billowing out before her, her Auburn hair, curled and crinkling like Bancho's locks, topping her tall figure absurdly.

"When I'd warned her—" she screamed, her breath coming now in gasps. "When I'd expressly forbidden—"

She sat down abruptly in a pale gold chair. Then, to come home unexpectedly tonight," she cried, fixing both people in the doorway with that baffled, pallid glare, "to find Grimes all dithering and muttering about her having gone off in the roadster with that fellow. No word to anyone, if you please! Supposed to be at her grandmother's, and no one there knowing anything at all. Idiots, all of them!"

Van Robard advanced. "We've scoured the shore road," he told her. "We've been everywhere. No trace of the car."

Mrs. Ladd drummed on a mar-

"I'll wait until you're safely in," Van said, helping her from the car.

ble topped table with vermilion-tipped fingers. The emeralds on her bosom flashed balefully as her breath came and went. "And it's what? Half-past one?"

"Nearly that," Van corroborated solemnly, consulting his wrist watch.

"Oh, do something. Do something the woman wailed, collapsing suddenly. "There must be something. Why can't I think what to do?"

"The papers! I have it tomorrow," she muttered, lifting her head again. "Nice, slimy mess they will make of it. And what's her father doing? That's what I'd like to know. Oh, yes, if he'd spend a bit of his time at home, instead of trailing chorus girls, it mightn't have happened. HE was supposed to be looking after the child."

Van looked uncomfortable. Liane ventured to say timidly in the pause. "Would you mind taking me home now? My mother will be terribly worried. I didn't have time to leave her a message. We rushed off so quickly."

"Yes, yes, go, all of you," cried the woman in the gold chair, wildly. "You, Van, run along and forget me and my troubles. She lifted streaming eyes to his concerned face.

"I had no business, Adele, in the first place, to drag this poor child into it," he began uncomfortably. "Only, I thought she might be able to help us, give us some clue."

"I'll come back," he said, in a lower tone. "Never fear, I'll not desert you."

He took Liane's hand. She was trembling now, with anxiety and excitement. When she had rushed off into the starry night at Van Robard's side she had completely forgotten the promise given her mother not 24 hours ago. What was it she had said? Oh, yes, "I'll cut him dead if I pass him on the road." Well, those had been light, wild words, lightly spoken. Because of course she could not treat this handsome man so cavalierly. She found a strange, deep attraction in his looks, his low-toned queries, the pressure of his brown hand. When he had asked her to go with him, to hunt for Muriel Ladd she had gone as unresistingly as a child might have. Villain he might be but he showed no cloven hooves to her.

However, now it was well past midnight and her mother probably lay shivering with dread, waiting for news of her.

"I was a wretch to drag you off that way," Robard said contritely, setting her in the car. "But I was sure Muriel had stopped to see you, probably had confided her plans. I couldn't think what else to do."

"It's all right," Liane said uncomfortably. She knew it wasn't all right but it did no harm to reassure him. The big car bowed smoothly along. Now they were in the side road, now Mrs. Smith's little white house blurred in the dimness ahead.

"I'll wait till you're safely in," he said, helping her out. "Have you a key?"

Liane glanced apprehensively toward the darkened windows. Odd that mother's light was not burning. The whole house was apparently asleep, blanketed in the hush of country stillness.

"Tell me," she whispered softly, impelled by who knows what inner urgency. "How did you know my name that night at the theater in town—the first time I saw you?"

She felt she had to know. After all she might never see him again. "Sweet child!" His voice caressed her and she thrilled to the timbre of it. "Sweet curious one," went on that deep, strangely persuasive voice. "I wondered how long it would be before you would ask that."

"Now you're laughing at me!" pouted Liane.

She felt a strong arm go around her suddenly. Liane put up her two slim brown young hands to ward him off. He let her go as suddenly as he had touched her but not before her fingers had felt the strong heart of him beating under that rough tweed coat.

"Don't be afraid!" he said softly. "You're such an infant." She could not see his face now, only the glimmer of those humorous deep-set eyes. "I knew your name because I had asked Mrs. Cleespaugh the day before as we drove past you on the street. You were coming out of the theater with another girl. You stopped to pet a dog."

"There's no mystery about it, then," Liane drawled suddenly, feeling rather foolish.

"None at all. Mrs. Cleespaugh's sort of cousin of mine. She was telling me about this theater venture and I was driving her down to see Vernon. That's all. I thought—no, I won't tell you what I thought when I saw you."

Liane felt a little pulse throbbing and pounding in her throat.

"Do tell me," she pleaded. "I can't sleep tonight until I know."

She turned her face to him in the darkness, like a flower all fragrance and delight. The man stared back at her a full moment before he replied. When he spoke his voice was roughened with feeling. "I thought," he began haltingly, "that you were the rarest thing I had seen in many a moon. I thought you looked like something infinitely desirable, infinitely to be loved. I thought all sorts of strange, old-fashioned, knightly thoughts. Like wanting to own a glove you had sworn off a rose you had thrown away. I thought—but why go on? The night waned and an anxious parent waits you above."

"Those are the loveliest words anyone has ever said to me," said Liane. "Forgotten now, was her promise. There was strange sweet magic in this man's voice, in his touch, in the way he looked at her. Some alchemy she did not understand worked in her brain.

"Go now," the man said, almost roughly. "And bless you."

He ran down the steps. Liane heard the sound of his motor car purring outside the gate, before she could bring herself to creep upstairs. A white figure stood at the door of Elsie's room.

"S-sh" murmured Elsie. "You're in luck because I did a little plain and fancy lying for you. Said Muriel had a headache and you'd had to take her home and would stay the night with her. Cass went to bed and to sleep instanter. Lucky for you."

"Thanks a lot," Liane whispered. "I'll tell you all about it tomorrow. What shall I do? I hate going in now and waking her up."

"Bunk on the couch in my room," Elsie suggested hospitably. "Then you can give me the low-down now before we go to sleep."

"And so the mighty Van brought you home, Sir Galahad himself," murmured Elsie when Liane had finished. "How touching for him to be out chasing Mrs. Ladd's little girl."

"Why do you say that?" Liane demanded.

"Why, he's that way about Adele Ladd. Everyone in town knows that," said Elsie scornfully. "That boy knows his way about. I can tell you."

"I don't believe it," said Liane. "I simply don't believe it."

Elsie examined her face in the dim light cast by one small bulb.

"Well, kid, you don't need to take it from me. You can read the tabloids," she said, with a yawn.

"She's old enough to be his mother," Liane pouted.

"Not quite," returned Elsie. "Matter of 10 years or so between them. That's nothing."

"Don't go falling for that baby," Elsie advised, clambering into bed. "He's the lawyer's delight. Been co-respondent three times in five years. That's Handsome for you."

Liane feigned sleep. A sickness and misery tugged at her heart. If Van Robard were bad then the world was bad. She couldn't endure the thought.

No one could look as Van did and be really bad. The nuns had taught her that character is mirrored in the face. Van didn't look wicked or depraved. How could what Elsie said be true?

Liane tossed and turned. The moonlight was a torture.

She reviewed every word which had passed between Adele Ladd and the man who searched wholeheartedly for Muriel. Her fevered fancy admitted that Adele seemed to have the right to order Van around. Why?

Anguished Liane imagined Adele Ladd laughing at her. What was it she would say to Van when next she saw him? Oh, something like, "Who's your shabby little friend? She's not much help in a crisis."

FIRST: Integrity—honesty. No permanent success can be achieved in any line without the fundamental requirements of integrity and character.

SECOND: The ability and willingness to work hard without too much supervision. An insurance company provides instruction for new agents, but their success will depend on their own initiative and energy.

THIRD: When you have worked hard and landed a big policy and you are counting on your commissions to pay the rent and grocery bills, which are coming in, and the company writes you that your case is turned down, it takes real courage to smile, put on your hat and go right after another case. Courage is an outstanding trait of character among successful life insurance men and women.

FOURTH: A little capital, not necessarily a big account, but credit, or backing, or help at home, which will enable the new agent to keep going for two or three months while he is getting his business started.

Business experience is valuable, because it affords an opportunity to acquire a knowledge of human nature and of how to deal with all sorts of people.

The insurance business gives the ambitious youngster an opportunity to go to the front quickly. He will be judged not by his age but by the results of his work, and if he can accomplish what older men are doing he earns just as much as they do.

You young people are the men and women of tomorrow. Thousands of you will eventually occupy high positions in the business world. Many of you will enter the life insurance business. Which of you will be the successful ones? Without any question it will be those of you who possess in large measure the qualities I spoke of in the beginning—integrity, the ability to manage yourselves, and courage.

BALLOON LANDS IN CITY

By United Press.

LILLIE.—A balloon, piloted by members of the Northern Aeronautical Association, was forced down in the heart of this city, due to bad weather conditions. Neither the pilots, nor any of the spectators, were injured, but three bystanders who helped the balloonists out of the car were overcome by gas fumes. The balloon came down in a street near the market square and lay poised on the street car wires for some time. It finally sank slowly to the street, the bag being slightly damaged.

The sale will start at 11:30 a. m., June 30. Buyers will be met at the Dixon hotel in Kansas City at 10 o'clock and given transportation to the farm. Weather conditions will not affect the sale.

All animals offered for sale have passed the tuberculosis test and may be shipped into any state.

The sale lot includes besides the herd sires, herd matrons more than 3 years old, 102 head; heifers, 2 years old and under 3, 38 head; yearling heifers, 28; yearling bulls, 26, and many calves.

The sale was ordered by the executors of the Dickey estate.

Bridge "Suicide" Leaves In Auto

WASHINGTON.—Washington's "million-dollar" bridge, from which many persons have leaped to their death, has become so famous that police rush there at the slightest mention of the absence of the "suicide."

Recently several police patrols dashed to the bridge, sirens screeching, only to be baffled by the absence of the "suicide."

It happened when Clarence A. Aspinwall, president of a storage company, stalled his car on the bridge. He went in search of a tow truck. A passerby, having read of the number of persons that had jumped from the bridge, decided the occupant of the "dead" automobile had "committed suicide."

He called police. People came from all directions and soon a line of cars the length of the bridge was tangled into a mass.

Police searched for the body. Soon Aspinwall returned to get his car. He was told a man had leaped from the bridge. He aided police.

Congestion became so bad that the officers ordered everyone off the bridge. In this way, they thought, the abandoned machine would be left. After the bridge had been cleared, they approached Aspinwall's car and began to take down the license plate numbers.
