BULL SESSIONS RATE CREDITS AT WISCONSIN

By WILLARD R. SMITH
United Press Staff Correspondent
MADISON, Wis.—College credit for "bull sessions" is one of the distinctive features of the University of Wisconsin experimental college.

With the college about to be abandoned and some of its methods absorbed by the institution as a whole, this practice promises to remain peculiar to the experimental school.

College men explain that "bull sessions" are informal dormitory debates, with subjects ranging from the desirability of red-headed cubs as sweethearts to the significance of abandoning the gold standard.

Conversations An Index. "We have felt that the conversation of college students in social rooms when the day is over are as much of an index of the effectiveness or ineffectiveness of the college as the talk of students in class rooms," stated Dr. Glenn Frank, president of the university.

Teaching is not the giving of information," explained Dr. Alexander Meiklejohn, head of the experimental college. "It is the stimulation and directing of a mind by other minds which are going in the same direction. And residence arrangements must be such as to give that influence both naturalness and power."

Human situations are substituted for subjects in the experimental college, and the application of this procedure on which Meiklejohn's experiment was based is admittedly limited.

Three-fold Basis. The experimental college procedure is on a three-fold basis, greater breakdown of the present subject matter, greater formalization of teaching methods, and greater socialization of the student.

With the university president admitting that the subject integration is limited in large groups, and with the housing policy and socialization plan, only the informalization of teaching procedure remains to be applied to the university as a whole.

DENTON, Nov. 18.—A resolution adopted by the local Arthur O. McNitzky Post of the American Legion today denounced the freedom of conscience resolution adopted last week by the Texas Baptist convention and charged the Baptist with succumbing to "communist and red propaganda."

The veterans criticized the Baptist resolution protesting the denial of citizenship to Prof. Douglas Macintosh of Yale university because he refused to promise to bear arms if he thought it morally unjustified. The legion characterized this resolution as dangerous, unpatriotic and un-American.

Hightower is Voted Eligible For Breck Game
The Oil Belt football committee debated the standing of Fred Hightower, Cisco quarterback, Tuesday night at a meeting at the Laguna Hotel in Cisco, and after some discussion voted that Hightower was eligible for participation in the Breckenridge-Cisco game.

The protest had been entered by Breckenridge on the grounds that Hightower had not been in the Cisco High school for the required 30 days prior to the Breckenridge-Cisco game. Evidence furnished by Breckenridge officials is said to have shown that Hightower was in the Tyler school until within less than 30 days before the game, while Cisco evidence is reported to have shown that this was not the case and that the player was at school in Cisco. No details of the discussion of the case was made public by members of the committee after the meeting.

He does not look for "recovery" but for something better and he hopes "we don't recover the old system" with a "bigger and better panic in 1940."

KING COTTON REGAINS THRONE AS PRICES RISE SOUTH'S BUSINESS REFLECTS NEW ADANCE NOW

Dixie Cheers, Sees Brighter Days Ahead As Fleecy Staple Starts Upward After Hitting Lowest Price in Modern Times in Big Slump.

EVERY BALE YOU SEE HERE JUMPED $1 IN ONE DAY'S TIME! Happy days are here again for Dixie cotton planters...

AS COTTON MARKET TURNS UPWARD

By LEROY A. SIMMS, NEA Special Writer

Cotton is King again in Dixie. Just when it seemed that there was no bottom for falling cotton prices to hit, increased consumption, smaller foreign crops and heavy profit-taking by short interests brought an upward turn which will mean millions more for southern cotton farmers.

The strength of cotton's position—and improved business conditions as a whole—was graphically illustrated when the government's extremely bearish November crop estimate of 16,900,000 bales was taken without a flurry and prices for the day closed $1 per bale higher than the opening.

Cotton experts believe the advance in the price of the staple is merely a reflection of generally better business conditions throughout the world, as indicated by the rising prices of wheat, corn and silver.

Higher prices for silver mean more money for countries on the silver monetary standard, many of which are heavy takers of American cotton.

The highest price ever paid for cotton was 43.75 cents a pound in 1919, while the lowest in modern times was 5.30 cents a pound in 1899, just two-fifths of a cent lower than the price on Oct. 5 of this year.

When the market closed after the November estimate, the value of the cotton crop at New York cotton exchange prices was $580,000,000. This was an increase of $115,000,000 from the value placed on the lower October estimate on Oct. 5, when the staple hit the lowest price in 32 years, five and one-half cents per pound.

Another business stimulant resulting from the rise in the price of cotton is the stronger position of southern banks, many of which faced difficulties when cotton hit the record low on Oct. 5.

Millions of acres formerly devoted to cotton were planted in food crops this year. Therefore, many plantations accustomed to buying large quantities of food-stuffs will have no such bills to meet this winter.

From a food standpoint, southern cotton growers will come closer to being self-supporting this winter than they have been since the close of the Civil war ended the blockade of southern ports in 1865.

Still another important result of the rise in cotton prices will be a more favorable balance of trade between the United States and Europe.

Cotton is still one of the nation's most important and valuable exports and the higher the price, the greater effect cotton will have on gold exports and imports.

Cotton experts believe the advance in the price of the staple is merely a reflection of generally better business conditions throughout the world, as indicated by the rising prices of wheat, corn and silver.

Improvements in stocks and securities also helped the cotton market by removing financial strain from many cotton traders who were also in the stock market.

Better business in the United States, now generally regarded very likely in the immediate future, would mean increased buying of cotton goods.

Huge acreage cuts for 1932 in Texas and other cotton growing states seem assured because of laws limiting the planting of cotton to 30 per cent of all land under cultivation.

Gems of Peril by HAZEL ROSS HAILEY

BEGIN HERE TODAY Mary Harkness plots to catch The Fly, who she believes 'framed' her brother, Eddie, with the murder of old Mrs. Jupiter, and later ran Eddie down and killed him to keep him from talking. She is aided by Bowen of the Star, Mary's fiance, Dirk Ruyter, and his family object to the notoriety. They believe Eddie guilty, as do the police. The case is dropped. Bruce Jupiter, absent for many years, returns from Europe with a woman friend. His father orders him out and makes Mary his heir. Bruce swears to rout Mary, who he thinks is a gold-digger. Dirk forbids Mary to continue the investigation, refusing to believe in the existence of The Fly. He tells Mary that people are repeating Bruce's charges and says if she goes to Miami on the Jupiter yacht, as she plans, he will also believe them. Mary goes, seeking The Fly, whose name is rumormongered at Hialeah. Dirk shows attention to his former sweetheart, Cornelia Tabor, who is trying to win him back. Through the listed names of the owner of the horse, Mary learns that Count De Loma is The Fly. She sees De Loma and her friend, Countess Louise, in secret conversation. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXXI Mary walked swiftly to the elevator and breathed a sigh of deep relief when the slowing started. She stepped out and opened the car upward. She would have given a great deal to know what subject was so engrossing Louise and De Loma, but she dared not risk the chance of being caught snooping about. Almost immediately she was sorry, though. Why hadn't she congealed herself and tried to catch at least a word of what was passing between those two? It might be of tremendous importance to her plans. If the Countess guessed she was eavesdropping, her promise and told her the purpose of this trip, might she not pass the information on to De Loma, either intentionally or otherwise? If De Loma ever had been of importance in her life, she would warn him if she could. The question-mark was Bruce. Distrustful of the whole affair, he might have violated her promise; Mary surmised there was not much that the crafty Louise could not worm out of him if he chose. Well, it was on the lap of the gods. Whatever was happening down there would have to happen. No one could reasonably have foreseen that those two would be intimates. It was a bad break, that was all. Bruce would say. Mary walked restlessly about the room. Sleep! It was far from her now. How could she sleep with this uncertainty hanging over her head? If she could only ask Bruce, reassure herself. If he knew those two were downstairs now, for instance, he might fly into a rage. What infinite pain Bruce could have been if only he had trusted her a little more. He should have been her greatest help, but he had sided with her enemies. His perfidy might even be responsible for the failure of the whole scheme! Resolutely Mary took down the telephone receiver, but only to call the desk and ask to have a boy sent for some records. She would need her wits about her tomorrow. When she awoke next morning the hot Florida sun was streaming in her window and the telephone at her elbow was ringing madly. A glance at her wrist-watch showed that it was nearly 10 o'clock. "Aren't you ever coming down?" Louise's half-scolding tones reverberated in the telephone. "We go to ride along the Jungle Hill and up the coast for lunch. Hurry!" "Don't wait for me," Mary told her coolly. "I shan't go this time." "Oh, but—" Quite evidently the other was not prepared for refusal. She did not know what to say next. She could not command him. Yet she knew quite well that so far Bruce had managed to thwart the girl's every effort to be alone. She must have turned to Bruce for Mary heard a low-voiced colloquy. Then Bruce spoke, coaxingly: "Surely you're not going to spend your precious day in bed? Come along! Dad's anxious to get started!" "Not I," Mary rejoined unflustered. "Amuse yourselves as you please. I have an appointment with the hair-dresser and some books to read. I'll just stay here and loaf." "As you please," Bruce replied coldly and rang off. "Now," thought Mary, provoked, "he'll be sure to think I'm up to mischief, and follow me!" Cool second thought, however, taught her it was unlikely Bruce would forego his day's outing because of any serious interest in her activities. Bruce was merely trying to make himself obnoxious, so that she would find life in the Jupiter household unbearable and leave. It was pleasant to go down to breakfast alone. The dining-room was cool and dark and blessedly empty. Early bathers had breakfasted and gone. And it was too early for lunch. Apparently she was the only lazybones in the hotel. Soothing, just to be alone... not to be surrounded by people one loathed, or feared, or despised, just pitied. Delightful to relax, not to have to keep up the complex game of pretense that she had to play, sleeping and waking, for so many tense, unhappy days of late. For the time being, she was freed of the ache for Dirk, even Peace, like a narcotic, numbed all her senses temporarily. The low hum of distant electric fans... the soft-footed, low-voiced waters... the hushed room, old-fashioned delicacy, a piece of bread and jam, is an ideal solution of the problem of what to give the children when their tummies begin to demand a re-fill to carry them over from one meal to another. Children have less storage capacity than adults, they are usually much more active, and in addition they must supply the demands of both growth and energy. As a consequence, they require what seems to many adults an enormous amount of food, and frequently really need a snack in mid-morning or mid-afternoon. The bread and jam meet all the requirements of such occasions. The sugar in the jam, and the bread, supply fuel for energy. The fruit in the jam is an excellent source of needed minerals and vitamins.

white linen, were uncommunicative. As she came face to face with the man in the chair, who rose swiftly to meet her, her relief was almost equal to her puzzlement. He was not, as she had feared, De Loma, but stranger. Try as she would, from a quick scanning of the good-looking, sunburned face, she could not recall ever having seen the man before in her life. NATIONAL BOOK WEEK AND OUR YOUTH

(By Mrs. W. K. Jackson) National Book week has its uses and but few abuses. If for no other object the observance of this week in a year of continuous weeks, when some special feature in American life is emphasized, reminds neglect or hurried parents, that there is a proper line of reading for their youth, that may be found in certain places, for their seeking, to provide a right and business and keeping the wolf from the door, father is apt to overlook the fact that son's eager mind is devouring any exciting literature that may drift his way; and mother in her daily round of contracts, church societies, teas, luncheons, movies, clubs, and Parent-Teacher associations, is apt to forget that daughter's enquiring mind is seeking the solution of mysteries of life and love, in books and magazines read in secret places, and spoken of, with bated breath, to playmates. Just for these and other possible conditions was the National Book week chosen as the counteractant and cure. Just for the good of our little city are the earnest efforts of the Thursday Afternoon club members, to provide a right and proper books for children and youth, books they may obtain from our library, supported by this club, and magazines, that tell of absorbing and interesting world affairs, and the world of facts and talents.

Who has failed to enjoy Mark Twain's stories of Tom Sawyer, and of Huckleberry Finn? Made even more indelible on the screen. These stories were shown here by our Lyric theatre.

Who has not lived in imagination, in the New England times of 60 or 100 years ago? As portrayed in the vivid stories for girls, by Mrs. A. D. Whitney of Boston, novels written 50 years ago? And the absorbing interest of such books as "Queechy," "The Wide, Wide World," an education in morals within itself; Grimon's Fairy Tales! What exciting adventures and delicious love stories! And who hasn't had pricking of the skin when reading Robinson Crusoe? Or wondered over the adventures in Swift's "Gulliver's Travels"? And, isn't Alice in Wonderland far preferable for our youth to "How Bob Robbed the Freight Car." And what delicious humor in Rex's Rabbit. Book week reminds us of the pictorialization of children's stories. Tarkington's "Penrod and Sam" has been recently shown by our Connellie theatre, as well as "Sorrel's Father and Son."

Radio programs sponsored by the American Booksellers association, are on the air this week. Listen in. And our youth is offered the magazine, "The Youth's Companion," that their parents read in their youth. A clean, vigorous magazine, with adventure and right sort of love stories. Not like the foetid love magazine on today's display, that may be bought for a dime, unless his or her mind is completely filled by content of books and magazines with which they should be surrounded in their home life, or can obtain at a public library from a responsible librarian, that there is no inclination or urge for lurid tales within cheap reach. National Book week is a step forward in safeguarding our youth, and in putting gentle reminders in the minds of parents of the value of good reading, and the influence of evil reading on the lives of our young.

GAME PRESERVE URGED

AUSTIN—A federal game preserve at Lake Austin is proposed by Congressman James P. Buchanan of this district. The lake originally was constructed for power purposes and is now unused. It would make an ideal bird preserve, Buchanan says. He has investigated and says it will be necessary for the state to cede the Colorado river bed to the federal government, which then could buy adjoining land.

Gay Party is Held at Home of Mrs. True Honoring Class.

Now that another season for gay entertainments is looking in the near distance preceding Thanksgiving and Christmas, colorful holidays of the year, many clubs and hostesses are planning events in keeping with the two outstanding dates dotted down in the little red book.

One of the first affairs opening this gala season was given last evening with Mrs. Alice D. True as hostess at her home, South Main street, when she entertained in honor of the Young Business Girls Bible class, of which she is teacher.

This honorary function especially complimented Misses Lora Jones and Louis Landtroop, on whose birthdays it was celebrated.

The home of the hostess was never more beautiful, graced throughout with masses of chrysanthemums, clusters of roses and graceful buds, grown in the garden of Mrs. True, the mums with their own foliage, together with a shower of tuberoses, sending their fragrance and whiteness against the other harmonizing colors.

Another pretty feature in the artistic decorations were tall floor baskets flanking either side of the doorway leading into the dining room, where a dainty hand-made cloth of embroidery covered the table centered with another vase of roses. The buffet reflected a lovely picture, centered with a perfectly shaped pumpkin, encircled with delicious red apples, and flanked with burning tapers of red, held in orange and black holders.

The radio topped with a bowl of golden-toned chrysanthemums furnished popular numbers during the evening.

Diversion for the hour was opened with the singing of the class song, "Come, Let's Get Together," followed with other familiar tunes. Very unique games were played including "How Much Do You Know About a Turkey?"

"Gossiping Circle" proved to be one of the most amusing as well as enjoyable games, numbers on the program. Those winning in contests and awarded prizes were Misses Fred Campbell, Joe Buck, and Olga Mitchell. Drawing the merriment to a close was that of a game known as the "Talent Contest," with Misses Faye Hook and Arritta Davenport chosen as judges for the entertainers.

Mrs. True was assisted in serving a delicious plate of jello moulds, topped with coconut, and olives, with cakes and fruited punch by Misses Olga Mitchell and Faye Hook. The plates were attractively finished with cups filled with candy corn.

Members who compose the club and class are Misses Rose and Ann McEyer, Evelyn Long, Mary Bond, Margaret Parker, Louise Landtroop, Mittie Pettitt, Louis Bernadine Cribbs, Mildred Bradley, Effie Mae Boyd, Lorene Bellnap, Ruth Shirley, Olga Mitchell, Aiyens Reed, Joe Burch, and Lora Jones. Visitors were Misses Freda Campbell, Faye Hook, and Arritta Davenport.

Pure food, pure milk, pure water—in all the things you eat or drink, you want absolute purity.

Purity counts in cigarettes, too

Making cigarettes as pure as they can be made is our business. And it's your business, too—because you smoke them.

All the materials that go into the making of CHESTERFIELD cigarettes are tested again and again by expert research chemists to see that they are absolutely clean and pure. Just like the things you eat or drink.

The tobacco is pure. The right kind—mild, sweet and ripe! Handled throughout by the most modern machinery.

The paper is pure. Clean. White. The best cigarette paper that money can buy.

There is cleanliness in every step of CHESTERFIELD's manufacture. Old-fashioned methods have been discarded, and CHESTERFIELDS are made and packed in modern sanitary factories where even the air is washed, and changed every four-and-one-half minutes.

Every day more men and women are changing to CHESTERFIELD. And changing for good! Four big reasons clinch the choice: Milder—Taste Better—Pure—Satisfy.
