FAMOUS TEXAS EDITOR PASSES ON

Death claimed James H. Lowry at his home in Honey Grove. For more than 50 years he had been identified with the "fourth estate." For more than 40 years he had been the editor and publisher of The Honey Grove Signal, one of the best edited and best illuminated of all the country weeklies that have flourished in Texas since the close of the war between the states. He was born on the banks of Reel Foot lake in old Tennessee, His family had been impoverished in that conflict of the sword. He came to Texas in early youth. He was a printer. He evolved into an editor and publisher and he was one of the most beloved of all the craftsmen under Lone Star skies. Indeed, he was the Bill Nye of Texas. He was a genius in the writing sense; he was a philosopher at all times. He served his state as well as his community. He was ever active in politics. He was a lifelong champion of the cause of education. He devoted 18 years' service as regent to the C. I. A., known as the State College for Women. He turned down tenders of appointment to office many times. He never became candidate for high place but once in his long career.

Away back in World War days he offered as a candi-† v 'date for congressman-at-large. He received a very large vote but Dan Garrett and Cyclone Davis were the winners of the two plums in that memorable contest. He loved the rod and the gun. He was a noted follower of Sir Izaak American Can Walton and he knew all the fishing ponds in Texas as Am P & well as all the choice spots to pursue the finny tribe along the Gulf coast. For three or four decades he was an outstanding member of the Texas Press association. He served as president for several terms as well as a delegate to the Avn Corp Del National ESditorial association many times. He was a AT&SFRy fluent orator as well as a gifted writer, a capital story Bendix Av teller, a real human being who loved his fellowmen, and those who knew him at his best admired him as one of Canada Dry the real good fellows and high class citizens of the "fourth Case J I "estate" as well as a valuable and patriotic builder ever Co advocating that which was best and wisest and sanest for the social order.

Y COLVIN, bronzed by miles of sand, sat that he might see the f Fifth Avenue. It was than mid-afternoon but ma: y w mows were warm with the yellow glow that is a glare by night. The skies were sullenly low and there was a drizzle in the chilly air. The English, Barrett reflected, would call it "a dirty day." To the average New Yorker it was "rotten weather." Those folks upon whom he had recently turned his broad back would call it "the will of Allah." Well, the faith of the East was the most comfortable but Barrett didn't share it.

He moved uneasily and lit a cigaret. It was always unsatisfactom to come back. Memories that seared his mind would leap from embers. A corner of an uptown old building would brush away 10 years to make him see Marcia, his tempestuous little sister, the daughter of his father's second wife. Marcia, violent in her trap. Marcia, crying, "Barry, you
