FRENCH TAKEN BY A NEGRO EARLY TODAY

Bloodhounds Had Trailed Fugitive Since Late Yesterday.

CROCKETT, Texas, Jan. 17.—J. B. French, one of the five convicts who escaped from the East-ham prison farm yesterday after a gun battle with two guards, was captured early today four miles from the farm by a negro farmer in whose house he sought refuge. Gebe Wright, the negro, held the unarmed French until Sgt. Charles Flournoy and his pack of blood hounds from the prison farm closed in on the house. The convict's trail was picked up by the hounds yesterday and followed for hours before French broke into the negro's house. It was only a few minutes later that the guard arrived.

Eastland Pastor's Father Is Dead

J. B. Lipsey of Savannah, Georgia, the father of Rev. C. W. Lipsey of Eastland, passed away Thursday night at ten minutes past ten, at the family home, following an illness of over a year, due to kidney trouble, but which had not prevented him from attending to his business until a few days prior to his death.

Mr. Lipsey was born in Phoenix City, Alabama, and was 57 years of age. He had been connected with the Seaboard Air Lines for 25 years and continued his work until less than two months ago. Funeral services were conducted Saturday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock with interment in the cemetery at Savannah.

UBS HEAR BUSHICK TELL OF CWA WORK

Frank H. Bushick, district Civil Works Administration supervisor for this district, which is composed of Eastland and 22 adjoining counties, spoke before a joint meeting of the Rotary and Lions club at noon today on the CWA work being carried out in the various counties of the state.

UBS HEAR BUSHICK TELL OF CWA WORK

At the outset of his talk Mr. Bushick said that Eastland County had been added to the 10th district, composed of 23 counties and that he had been sent out to check up on how the various places were carrying out the regulations and how they were spending the money that was being allotted to the county.

He pointed out that all CWA workers were working under State Relief Director Lawrence Westbrook and were public servants and no favors could be had from any of them. He said it was his business to see how the unemployed, sick and distressed were being treated.

The speaker mentioned that he had made hundreds of investigations in Eastland county and that 3,000 complaints had been received and that more complaints were received in Austin from Eastland county than any five other counties in the state. Eastland county, he said, was 60 per cent worse off than any other county in his district and that he was surprised to find the county, once the queen of West Texas, in this deplorable condition.

When the federal government puts out money for employment or relief, he stated, the money was expected to be spent at home to help stimulate business in the local communities and to put money in circulation in the towns where relief was needed. A total of $331,000,000 was spent in Texas on relief before a penny of state money was spent and now it is up to Texas to help take care of her own needs.

In some of the counties, he mentioned, compassion for the needy has been neglected while greed, lust for political power had been the chief thought, but that color, creed, or party would not be recognized and given any preference. These, he said, were orders from President Roosevelt and if anyone found that anyone connected in any way with the CWA was using his office to further any party or was not treating the people right, he would fire them immediately.

Investigation in Eastland county, he said, showed that expenditures were not being made according to regulations and intelligent records were not being kept in most instances. The payroll in the county amounts to $80,000 a month, but he had found all projects unorganized and in a chaotic condition. He said that he was here to help straighten all these evils out and any suggestions or complaints that were sent to him would be appreciated and would not be considered as meddling but would be considered as one who was cooperating with the administration.

He pointed out that the commissioners court and the county judge were cooperating 100 per cent with the CWA, but that petty jealousy between Ranger, Cisco and Eastland was doing the administration more harm than any one thing, and that when complaints of one town were sent to Austin the "dirty linen" of the other towns was aired. This caused the workers in Austin to think that the people of the county were of a low order and left the impression that no one was trying to cooperate in the work being done.

A BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

THE EXCELLENCY OF GOD'S NAME: O Lord our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth! who hast set thy glory upon the heavens.—Psalm 8: 1.

KINGFISH LONG PROTESTS THE MOORE APPOINTMENT

Daniel D. Moore of New Orleans was named by the President to be collector of internal revenue in Louisiana. Kingfish Long is offering strenuous opposition to the confirmation of Moore. And why? The Kingfish has placed it in the record that Moore is "personally obnoxious to him."

"Well, Moore is not personally obnoxious to Senator Tom Connally; Connally is a member of the Senate finance committee before which the Moore nomination is pending. Connally conducted a recent investigation into the Broussard-Overton so-called political scandal in Louisiana. This is what the junior senator from Texas said to a coterie of Washington correspondents: "From my knowledge of political affairs in Louisiana I want to say that unless there is something more against Moore than that he is 'personally obnoxious' to Senator Long I will most certainly vote to confirm the appointment. President Roosevelt and his administration ought not to be hindered in making appointments in Louisiana because they do not suit Senator Long."

A sub-committee of the Senate finance committee will handle the Moore case. It is composed of Senator Alvan Barkley of Kentucky and Sen. Harry Byrd of Virginia. David A. Reed of Pennsylvania is the republican member of the sub-committee. This trio will investigate Kingfish Long's charges against the choice of the President for collector of internal revenue in the district of Louisiana.

David D. Moore is one of the outstanding newspapermen of New Orleans and Louisiana. He is a native Texan. In his youth he became a practical printer and studied the game while walking the treadmill of a weekly newspaper. He moved on to New Orleans. He became a ready and forceful writer. For years and years he was a high executive either as publisher or editor of leading daily newspapers of the Creole city. After an absence he returned to Texas. This when Col. William Randolph Hearst became the owner of the old Fort Worth Record. Hearst named Moore as his executive representative of the Fort Worth morning newspaper. Then the Record changed ownership again. Moore returned to New Orleans and again identified himself with a leading daily newspaper which never did take kindly to the political practices or methods of the Kingfish who came from the hills of Louisiana. Now who is going to win? The Kingfish of the Cyprus country or the President of the United States?

PICNIC OF EVASION OVER

The national government has suggested, with the keynote from President Roosevelt, that instead of raising the income tax on the little fellows, the loopholes be closed so as to get some of the rightful revenue for colossal dodgers such as have been brought to light recently.

Heating, that. Reassuring, in that an age of government-sanctioned and congress-created exploitation of the average business man and the small fellow, in the interest of the monopolist and the gigantic capitalistic promoter, has been brought to an end.

New senate leadership, reflected in the Wiggin-Mitchell et al investigation, has showed that the policy of national legislation can no longer let the man of a hundred million dollars slip out of all his income taxes and make the fellow of $50,000 or $500,000 pay a heavy load.

Somehow, it seems, with a background of the stock-jobbing investigation, and of President Roosevelt's broad national policies, those in authority are getting back close to the original idea of a government for and in the interest of a whole people.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK
By EDSON R. WAITE, Shawnee, Oklahoma

THAT a city booster radiates optimism.
The real booster makes each step a forward, constructive one.
The pessimist feels that the trend of his city is backward.
The booster never feels that way. He is full of the progressive spirit and knows that where there is a will there is a way. He has found the way and that way is forward.
The people radiating a spirit of optimism and progressiveness are what build towns into cities and keep the wheels of industry moving at a rapid rate.
Nearly everyone can combine business with pleasure. It is both business and pleasure to take an active part in the upbuilding and betterment of the home city.
To follow the leaders in city building is a good policy. Most cities lead because they have leaders and the people as a whole stand behind their leaders.
Some cities fail to go ahead, not because they do not have good leaders, but on account of the indifference to their city's welfare by the majority of the citizens.

American Airmen Turn Backs On A $700 Air Flivver Plan

NEW YORK.—"Would you buy a flivver airplane for $700? That is, if they were put into mass production of 10,000 right away." This astonishing question—in substance—headed a recent questionnaire that was placed in the hands of 33,500 licensed American airmen—pilots, student pilots and aircraft mechanics. The query came from the Aeronautics Branch, Department of Commerce.

Well, the veteran fliers joined in a nation-wide howl of amusement. Which, however, due to the solemn tone of the memorandum quickly gave way to apprehensive murmurs among men and women fliers alike.

Here is the question in official language: "Would you buy a two-place, low-wing, monoplane, constructed of a new steel alloy, fitted with an eight-cylinder, small-bore engine of 4,000 r.p.m. and a geared propeller. The land speed would be about 20 miles per hour, using air-brakes? If the answer is "No," please give your reasons."

Pilots everywhere, as apparently was anticipated, answered "No," for the following reasons: In the first place, aviation has passed through two adolescent

French Gamble On U. S. Dollar

PARIS.—Parisians are the newest recruits to the ranks of speculators in the exchange and particularly those who are gambling on dollar quotations. Officials of exchange bureaus and branch banks around the Bourse report an increasing number of French men and women, buying and selling dollars, francs, sterling or florins, guessing on the next day's exchange rates. This activity particularly is surprising in view of the traditional cautionousness of the French. However, two reasons may be cited for this unusual speculation. One is the human craving for unearned profits, now made possible even to small gamblers in the field of exchange because of the uncertainty of the dollar. The other is the fact, not forgotten by the French, that fortunes were made in a few weeks in the period 1926-28 by speculators in the rocketing franc. While today's gambling by all types of middle-classes in France does not materially affect the exchange quotations, as it involves not more than a few million francs, it is recognized as a curious change in a nation of eminently prudent, thrifty citizens. It is also peculiar that so many of these small gamblers are women, who for centuries have held rigid control of the family purse.

How many persons, to your personal knowledge, in addition to yourself, would purchase such an airplane? Absolutely none to my personal knowledge. Although there may be a couple of hundred of Barnum's pets still left loose in the land, which would leave 9,800 of the little putt-putts to be disposed of.

FRECKLES AND HIS FRIENDS-By Blosser

Washing Machines Flood U. S. Homes

CHICAGO.—A wave of buying which swept more than 950,000 washing machines into America's homes in 1933 was credited by officials of the industry for the second biggest year in its history. Only in the boom days of 1929, when 1,083,000 machines were sold, was this mark passed. The 1933 production, greater by 55 per cent than 1932's, was for immediate installation in homes and not for future use, said J. R. Bohnen, secretary of the American Washing Machine Manufacturers Association. He attributed the increase in volume of sales to re-employment, increased payrolls and the general strengthening of the national morale.

Anti-Sales Tax Bloc Being Formed

AUSTIN.—Rep. George W. Winningham, Mexia, is busily engaged in organizing an anti-sales tax bloc for the expected second called session of the 43rd legislature. Winningham said the first 35 responses he received showed 25 against the sales tax to 10 for it. Organization of the bloc will be perfected after the session begins, Winningham said. If a special tax is needed to take care of the relief bonds, Winningham said, he favors a tax on labor-saving machinery. "It causes unemployment and should be taxed to support unemployed," he argues. That the sales tax movement is getting support as well as opposition was indicated by a tour in Texas of Dewey H. Waits, co-author of the Mississippi sales tax.

It didn't have fair hair and an exquisite figure, like a Tanagra figurine, for nothing.

It didn't have fair hair and an exquisite figure, like a Tanagra figurine, for nothing.

Derek said, "I wish we could have dinner here, all by ourselves. The fire, I wish we need it..." Lila frankly stared. "What? Not go to Marko's restaurant?" "I know," Derek set his jaw. "Isn't it? But that's what I wish, just the same. Let's call him up..."

Lila had worked himself into a more cheerful frame of mind by the time he'd finished shaving. A glance out of the high windows assured him of the fact that it was snowing again. Good enough! That, at any rate, insured the Kris Kringle touch. Lila was beautiful in the soft brown fur. What a lucky chap he was to have her! He'd been a fool to think he could keep her all to himself this afternoon. She was far too lovely to stay hidden.

The party at Marko's was in full swing when they arrived. Marko had the entire top floor of an exclusive apartment hotel in the east sixties. A man servant with an impressive face let them in. He was a new one. Derek had never seen him before. The noise struck him like a blow, when the door swung inward. Noise of radio music, of heightened human voices, of slipping feet. People were dancing. Marko had a crowd, as usual.

"What's wrong with you, Lila?" Lila's tone was frosty. She slipped out of the sleek brown and Derek caught it. "You've got gum as an oyster all evening. I sure everyone noticed it. The rest of the party..." He flung his coat down and ped open his tie. "I don't like it just went dead on me." She cocked an eyebrow at him. "Snap out of it, young fellow. Marko likes bright faces like him."

Derek went upstairs on laggard feet. This, he told himself rather dourly, wasn't Christmas. Why, as a kid, back home in Vermont, he had loved all the panoply of the season: the tree, smelling spicy and tantalizing; the carols in the snow; the candle-light windows—everything about it. He had even the smile to think of it now) liked to go to church on Christmas day. The little old meeting house had had a special holiday odor, compounded of fir boughs and resin and wood-smoke. Well, no one he knew nowadays went to church. On Christmas they behaved much the same as any other day of the year. They had cocktails, told the same old jokes...

Lila was in her element. She called greetings to half a dozen people in the foyer as she passed through. Derek felt a nervous twitching in his cheek. Well, after a drink or two he wouldn't mind the racket so much. That was one comfort. His host greeted him. Marko was in high feather. He was bubbling with gaiety. Had Derek seen the tree? Ah, he hadn't! But he must—at once. Someone take Mr. Bliss to the dining room. Lila, whispered Marko in the younger man's ear. Had chosen the decorations for him. Charming! Everyone admired them so.

Derek, in the wake of a blond youth he remembered seeing in Marko's private office the week before, found the tree no familiar affair of laden fir boughs and tinsel, but an artificial one, a modest-size tree in silver, all angles. Blue stars appeared at intervals in its traversed branches. Derek stared, but there was no admiration in his eyes. Was this Lila's idea of a Christmas tree? Almost he should...

"That's a deadly life. I hate it," grumbled the young man to himself, shoving before the crystal go to church on Christmas day.
