A BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

OUR DAILY BREAD: Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Jehovah my rock, and my redeemer.—Psalm 19: 14.

KINGFISH II AS HISTORIAN OF SAN JACINTO VICTORY

Henry Ford in a famous court trial testified as a witness that he believed "most history to be bunk." Kingfish Long of Louisiana is a remarkable man. He has covered a lot of territory and hurled himself into many fields of endeavor in recent years. Now he has appeared in a new role. His latest is that "New Orleans bums won the battle of San Jacinto." This is an Associated Press Washington story that should be placed in the scrapbooks of all Texans: "Gen. Andrew Jackson defeated the British at New Orleans with Lafitte's pirates. Kingfish Long said that when Sam Houston some 20 years later was trying unsuccessfully to recruit an army of Texans, the old Hero of the Hermitage said to him: "Sam, those Texans won't fight. Go get you some Louisiana pirates." So Houston recruited an army of pirates and bums, and with the pirates' cannon, whipped the Mexicans at San Jacinto."

Kingfish has gone to New Orleans to back a Kingfish slate for municipal offices. Election takes place late in January. Before his departure from Washington to Kingfish territory he said: "Grand Isle and Lafitte (the former pirate strongholds) cast about 17,000 votes AND ALL EXCEPT ONE OR TWO GO FOR ME." It appears that the descendants of the pirates of the two ancient strongholds recognize a warrior when they meet a warrior in the middle of the political road. Think of it! This is the Long version of the battle which led to Texas independence: "New Orleans bums and pirates whipped the Mexicans at San Jacinto." Whataman! Whatalia! Today absolute dictator of a provoked commonwealth, he hopes some day to be supreme dictator of a federation of 48 states. Wonderful age—this.

TOTAL COTTON INCOME OF TEXAS FARMERS

Total cotton income of Texas farmers for 1933 was $259,123,402, exclusive of cottonseed, and was at least $100,000,000 larger than it otherwise could have been without the plow-up campaign. This is the estimate furnished by C. A. Cobb, chief of the cotton section of the agricultural adjustment administration in a statement to the Texas A. & M. college extension service. Furthermore Agent Cobb declared the cotton crop of 1933 was the "most valuable the South has had since 1929 when cotton sold for an average of 16.8 cents per pound." Now as to rental payments on plow-up contracts: Figures released from Washington show that a total of $43,127,942 had gone to Texas in the form of payments on 152,683 contracts accepted in the campaign. Texas producers also hold option on 731,023 bales of cotton at 6 cents a pound. This was the record for 1933. There is another acreage reduction campaign on for the season for 1934-35. Where will we go from here?

The American people are the greatest producers in the world, yet when we watch many of them investing their savings we cannot help but wonder how much serious thought they have given to the problem of making the money they have made more money for them.

You should not try to blow a train off the track with your horn. It can't be done!

THE CELLARS OF FRANCE

Married Flirts

By MABEL McELLIOTT

BEGIN HERE TODAY

GYPSY MORELL and TOM WEAVER are married on the same day as ALL HOTELLING and DENIK BLISS, but Lisa expects to live in luxury while Gypsy keeps her job teaching in a settlement school.

Gypsy has to struggle to keep expenses within Tom's income. Another problem is Tom's jealousy of weekly MARRIOTT BROUGHTON who once asked Gypsy to marry him and whom they meet at the Blisses' home. When the doctor tells Gypsy she is to have a baby she gives up her job. Summer comes and is intensely hot. Gypsy and Tom move to a cottage on Long Island owned by a friend.

The baby is born in late September and the Weaver returns to their apartment. Gypsy finds housework with the baby to care for, exhausting.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXII

GYPSY, assembling towels, soap powder and olive oil, scolded herself. "I'm a bad mother." What a lot she needed for a baby! She had never realized it before. Quite callously she had criticized young mothers for not doing this, doing that, "Keeping up." It was generally called. And yet how could you expect them to play bridge, to read the latest books, to be bright and interesting when they faced such mountainous tasks day after day?

David was naughty that morning. Perhaps he missed the expert ministrations of the absent Mrs. Burby. Perhaps he sensed the nervousness of his young mother. At any rate he cried. He cried and cried and cried.

Gypsy was shaking with nervousness and fatigue when the ordeal of the morning bath was finished. A cold perspiration beaded her upper lip and her knees sagged as she laid the now sleepy, immaculate infant in his crib.

Could she possibly go out at the rest of the dinner hour? And where was Tom? He hadn't even telephoned. She was ready to cry with weakness and discouragement.

A key grated in the lock and Tom ushered in a big, blond, clean-shaven young woman wearing a long, unfashionable coat. "This is Elsa, darling," Tom announced. "Elsa's going to do whatever you want her to."

Elsa worked parttime. Three days a week she came at night and stayed until one. The other four days she came at one and stayed until seven, leaving dinner prepared. She was slow, tiresome, clean.

After that things went more smoothly. Elsa was a treasure. Tom and Gypsy told each other. She was a jewel.

"How can we afford it if I simply don't know," Gypsy would say, frowning at over the bills. But there was now no question in her mind about letting Elsa go. It was simply not to be thought of, Tom said, and she agreed. Until she was stronger, at least.

The baby grew—flourished. The days rushed by, punctuated only by bath-time, nap-time, feeding-time. Sometimes the imperturbable Elsa stayed in the evening and the young Weavers dashed out to a movie. But this was not often. The budget was strained too tight to allow much entertainment.

"What did we ever do with our money before?" Gypsy wondered artlessly about one stormy November night when she had established herself in the big chair opposite Tom. Silk stockings and manures, Tom's silk stockings and manures, and sundries and matinee and new hats—why, she had thought nothing of all these before her marriage! Now they seemed the supreme luxuries.

A WAIL from the bedroom interrupted her reverie. She rushed in, to find two pink hands waving above the blankets.

"Isn't he wonderful!" she marveled. "Isn't he the most precious thing alive!" Tom said he was. Surely no other baby in the metropolis waked exactly on the dot of feeding-time, as David did. Tom held him while Gypsy warmed the bottle, testing it against her cheek as she had seen Mrs. Burby do.

He was a beautiful baby, he was beyond price. But if only he didn't waken so early in the morning! Only his demands and his needs would not multiply daily! No matter how much Elsa did there was always a full quota of tasks for David's mother. It seemed to Gypsy she was nearly always tired these nights. Almost too tired to talk to Tom, to be gay and amusing and interested. Puzing the baby's carriage over the sidewalks was a dull duty.

Gypsy laughed at herself, at her absorption, but deep down she was conscious of a pin prick of fear. Tom went out into the world every morning. He came into contact with new ideas, new people. While she—well, she was just a vegetable these days, she told herself, smiling wryly. Tom always contradicted her loyalty when she said these things. But could he help seeing it? She wondered.

Helen Marr came to call, and Blanche Jordan. They admired the baby, they brought him presents. Everyone was sweet and kind. They gave advice. They told Gypsy she must go about more—mustn't let herself get rusty. Helen asked her to lunch at the Plaza and Gypsy wriggled out of the invitation as gracefully as possible because she hadn't a new hat.

"Why didn't you go with her sweets?" Tom wanted to know. And Gypsy made some excuse because she wouldn't hurt him by saying she'd nothing decent to wear. Besides, no matter where she went these days she was forever flying back to the baby. Was he warm enough? Was Elsa careful? If there should be a fire... No, she would not leave him for long. Silly—It was all silly, but sometimes when she looked at him asleep his littleness and helplessness and precociousness squeezed at her heart.

SHE found herself weeping a good deal at this time; weeping for no reason at all, or for the slightest of reasons. She would be gulping back sobs. They would choke her throat, tears would flood her eyes. "I am a fool," she would tell herself after one of these brief storms. But she was not strong yet.

"You're much too pale and thin," her mother told her when the family came over from Blue Hills. She scolded Gypsy all afternoon—lots of milk... beef tea... a good nap after lunch." Gypsy listened, nodded, agreed. Useless to remark that her resting times and David's did not coincide. When her back was on fire, when her eyes stung and her feet were weary, David was wide-awake, big-eyed, ready for his airing. When David slept in doors there were dozens of things to do. She had no time to cold cream her face, nor give her hair the much strokes it had been accustomed to. Her nails were short and guileless of enamel. If she sat down with a book or a day-old newspaper she soon felt herself nodding off. No, David's demands upon his young mother were prodigious. No use to tell Mrs. Morrell all this. It was... I only worry her.

"You ought to give up this place," Gypsy's mother would say in her gentle, fretful tones, looking about her disatisfiedly at the cream-colored walls and the bright curtains. "You ought to come in with us. Bea can move back into her old room and I can fix the sewing room up for the baby."

Gypsy had heard all this a dozen times before. She was tempted—she was often tempted. The vision of herself in the big, shabby, friendly old house, of Clytie, running up to her with one of the oldtime breakfast trays; of a shadowy someone "taking baby off your hands".... It was all terrifically alluring. But no—aside from the fact that such an arrangement would be unfair to her parents, she felt strongly that it would be also a wound to their pride, hers and Tom's.

SO she would put the generous well-meant invitation aside with gentleness. "You know we have a lease here, Numa."

Mrs. Morell brushed this aside with characteristic lightness. "Well, break it, break it. Other people do...."

Gypsy would smile, sigh and change the subject. No, their problem could not be solved this way.

Meantime she saved, she bought cheap cuts of beef for ragouts, she contrived a delicious pudding with one egg and some scraps of bread. She taught the silent Elsa to save bits of butter and cream. She walked to the chain stores, pushing the rosy baby in his dark blue carriage, to buy the things listed in the day's advertisement as "specials." There was nothing she did not know these days about balancing the food budget. Was this the same Gypsy who had danced far into the morning hours 18 months ago, who had spent a whole week's wages on a silly little hat with a feather? It was—and yet it was not. Gypsy's high color was dimmed. Her laugh rose less readily to her lips. Her step was not so light. And yet there were moments—on witness New Year's eve when she wore her old red velvet with a new sheer frill—when one caught a glimpse of the old gayety and wildness.

Tom held her close, dancing in the Cahavan hallway, hung with looped crepe paper. "You're perfectly beautiful tonight, darling!"

She could see herself in the old-fashioned mirror. Bright eyes, dark hair above them.

"Am I really?" She felt tonight as though she were made over. Why didn't they do this more, she and Tommy? They were getting old before their time.

Hunt Gibson, uncommonly handsome in the black and white of dinner clothes, came up and claimed her for a dance and Tom went off with one of the Blake girls who was pretty and amusing.

"Haven't seen you for years," Hunt grinned down at her with that three-cornered, tantalizing grin of his. "You look grand."

He danced superbly. Gypsy, told herself. He was one of those irritating men who did everything well. Too self-satisfied, she decided, once and for all.

"May I come and see you all some time?"

She was just lifting her eyes to his to reply when she touched her arm—said hurriedly, "Gypsy, they've phoned from home to say the baby's ill."

Gypsy sagged against Hunt's black-clothed shoulder.

FRECKLES and HIS FRIENDS—By Blosser

Gus Moreland to Defend Title at Houston Feb. 20

By United Press
 HOUSTON, Tex.—Gus Moreland, Dallas amateur will defend his title for the third consecutive time and seek a new record for straight victories at the 20th annual invitation golf tournament of the Houston Country Club February 20 to 25.

The Dallas links marvel equalled the record of George Rotan, Houston, by winning the championship for the third consecutive time last year. Moreland beat Ossie Carlton of Houston to retain his title.

Johnny Dawson, Chicago veteran and winner of the Houston tourney in 1930 who went down before Moreland's faultless shooting in 1932, will again seek the title this year, Chairman Carig Belk of tournament committee has announced. He was beaten in the semi-finals last year by Carlton and failed to reach the finals in 1931.

Invitations sent out to the 1934 tournament are expected to bring other national stars. One went to Johnny Goodman, Omaha amateur who upset the dope to win the National Open last year and a leading candidate for the United States Walker Cup team which plays at historic St. Andrews in England this May.

Goodman reached the finals in 1931 only to fall before Moreland's unerring strokes.

Another invitation went to George T. Dunlap, national amateur champion, to try his skill for the crown that has brought reverses to many national title holders.

Program for the event next month is the same as followed last year, Belk announced. Qualifying rounds will be played February 20 and 21. Match play will be February 22, reducing the championship flight to eight men. The 36-hole quarter finals are set for February 23 with the semi-finals February 24 and the championship round Feb. 25.

All lesser flights are to be completed on the fifth day of the tournament, leaving the course open for the finalists the last day, Belk explained.

ALLEY OOP

Boy, 7, Sees for The First Time

By United Press
POLK, Mo., Jan. 27.—After nearly seven years of blindness, Loren Lockhart, seven, entered upon the happiest year of his life with the restoration of his sight recently at a Springfield, Mo., hospital where treatments had been given him for three years.

Loren was born blind, with cataracts over both eyes, and it was not until he was four years old that an attempt was made to remedy the condition.

Delicate treatments were necessary and he was compelled to travel to the Springfield hospital from his home here, many times before results became apparent. The trips often were made alone.

Throughout the long process, Loren remained cheerful and courageous and endeared himself to the staff of the hospital by many small kindnesses and his rendition of Ozark Mountain ballads.

The sight of a lighted Christmas tree in the hospital left him

Workers Restoring A Famous Lake

By United Press
SUPERIOR, Wis.—Flowage lake, famous years ago among Wisconsin lumbermen as the "gate" through which millions of logs passed on their way down the St. Croix river, is being recreated through the efforts of CWA workers.

More than 850 men are clearing 2,400 acres of land for the project, which will restore the lake to its original size. It disappeared a quarter of a century ago, when lumbering operations were stopped, and old Copper dam, which held the water in check, fell to pieces. A new dam is expected to raise the water 12 feet.

The lake will provide a haven for migratory waterfowl. It also is expected to bring back small-mouth black bass fishing.

Sailors, Soldiers To Be Given Ball

By United Press
GALVESTON.—Sailors and soldiers will be feted here Feb. 8 at the annual army and navy ball given under the auspices of the joint legislative committee composed of several city organizations.

High army officials and masters of warships which will be docked here will be honor guests.

A dinner will precede the ball. Congressman Clark W. Thompson of Galveston has indicated he may fly here from Washington and that he may be accompanied by Maj. Gen. Douglas MacArthur, chief of staff of the army.

Others expected to attend are Gen. John Hagoood, commander of the Eighth Corps Area with headquarters at San Antonio; Gen. C. R. Howland, commander of the Third Artillery Brigade, and the commanders of Fort Clark, Fort McIntosh and Fort Brown.

Huey Long's law library filled a whole freight car when moved to Washington. So, you see, there's really no need of keeping all such information in his head.

Gangsters Land In Police Trap

Bones of Giant Harry Mammoth Found on Farm

YORKTOWN, Tex.—Fossilized bones of a great hairy mammoth that once roved over South Texas have been found by Eugene Gross on his farm five miles south of here.

The skull, tusks, teeth and leg bones of the prehistoric animal were found 20 feet down the side of a ravine, preserved in limestone and sand. The tusks are more than two feet long and the teeth show double transverse ridges which identify the great animal as a mammoth.

University of Texas, Texas A. & M. college and Smithsonian Institute authorities have assured Gross that his find would be a welcome addition to their exhibits.

Dr. Mark Francis of A. & M. college identified the skeleton as belonging to the Pleistocene age.

Dr. E. H. Sellards, director of the bureau of economic geology of the University of Texas, said large herds of the mammoths were in Texas for an extensive period.

How Are YOUR Nerves?

Whatever your job or position in life, healthy nerves are worth any effort. Yet with many of us jangled, irritated nerves are only too well known!

Check up on your habits—your eating, your sleeping, your recreation, and your smoking. Countless people have turned to Camels and are enjoying a new freedom from jangled nerves. And they are urging their friends to join them!

Camels are made from finer, MORE EXPENSIVE TOBACCOS than any other popular brand.

You'll like the taste... the remarkable mildness... of Camel's choice-quality tobaccos. And you can enjoy Camels steadily... hour after hour... without nervous irritation, or the aftertaste associated with the flat or "sweet" type of cigarette.

So change to mild, rich, good-tasting Camels, they never get on your nerves... never tire your taste.

Miss Mary Wiggins, America's most daring Stunt Girl, says: "I have to be sure my nerves are healthy to do my stunts. As to smoking, I've found that Camels are milder, better in flavor, and do not give me 'edgy' nerves, even when I am smoking a lot."

Mrs. F. R. Bruce, Larchmont, N. Y. Mother, says: "Healthy nerves are important to me, too. Meeting infinite demands with patience and unruffled nerves—that's a mother's job. And one who is 'on edge' with nerves cannot create a happy home. Smoking is one of my chief enjoyments. I have found that the choice, more expensive tobaccos used in Camels never upset my nerves—and I prefer their rich, mild flavor."

Chevrolet's New Merchandising Plan In Force

DETROIT, Jan. 27.—A new automobile merchandising policy whereby the purchaser will be appraised of the full cost of his automobile delivered in front of his door, rather than having to rely on ambiguous "f. o. b." prices, was announced here today as effective immediately in the entire Chevrolet organization by Williams E. Holler, general sales manager of the company.

A campaign is now being launched among dealers and retail salesmen in all parts of the United States instructing them in the new policy and appraising them of the suggested delivered price to be quoted in their respective communities.

"We are going to take the blinders off the order blank," Mr. Holler stated. "We are going to let everybody know exactly how much their cars will cost them delivered in front of their doors. We are going to show exactly what makes up the difference between the list, or f. o. b. price, and the final delivered cost.

Mr. Holler announced the new merchandising plan at his Detroit headquarters following his return from the New York Automobile Show, where final arrangements on the new policy were perfected.

As an instance of what the new procedure means to car buyers, Mr. Holler pointed out that while list prices on the company's new 1934 models average $70 higher than in 1933, the actual increase in cost to the purchaser in New York is only $40. While the list, or "f. o. b." price, throughout the United States averages 14 per cent above 1933, the delivered costs, actually average only eight per cent higher.

"I am confident," said Mr. Holler, "that this plan will enable us to deliver automobiles all over the country at a lower price to the purchaser than any other make of volume car."

The nation-wide program of Chevrolet dealers to deliver cars at the lowest cost to the customer is based on giving the buyer an honest value for every dollar spent, Mr. Holler pointed out.

"After all," he said, "the man who buys an automobile wants to know how much his car will cost him standing in front of his home. Hereafter our salesmen are going to quote him that figure only. He will thus be spared the unpleasantness of discovering that the ultimate cost was considerably above his first expectation.

"Needless to say, this new merchandising policy was made possible only through the wholehearted cooperation of our 10,000 dealers. They have been quick to concur with our opinion that the new policy is fundamentally right and that we will have the support of the public as soon as they recognize our aims."

Mr. Holler voiced enthusiasm over the prospect of his company for this year. "We introduced our 1934 models early this month," he said, "at 100 special exhibits all over the country—separate, complete automobile shows in themselves—to a most interested and responsive public. At the close of the first week our salesmen had booked 70,000 bona fide orders for immediate delivery.

"The fine response of the public in terms of orders will insure the day and night operation of our plants for many months to come.

"America is coming back—fast! There is no doubt of it. More intricate even than attendance and sales figures at the New York automobile show and our own local shows is the changed attitude of people—visitors and automobile men both. At the shows I attended, almost a carnival spirit prevailed. There was more enthusiasm, more of a 'go-forward' feeling than at any show since 1928. We are coming back and the means by which it is being accomplished is much less important than the fact itself."

Cross Country Bus Locale For Film At Arcadia Theatre

"Fugitive Lovers," the new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer melodrama coming today to the Arcadia theatre, brings an entirely new kind of picture to the screen, according to advance reports.

Practically all the action of the exciting story takes place on a great Greyhound bus bound west from New York City to Hollywood.

As the scenes are authentic, being "shot" from a giant road cruiser, it actually sped across the continent, the auditor, by proxy, enjoys the sensations of a cross-country trip.

As the bus with Madge Evans, Ted Healy and his "stooges," Nat Pendleton, C. Henry Gordon, Ruth Selwyn and dozens of other characters aboard, speeds past a penitentiary on its first night out of New York, Robert Montgomery, in the role of Porter, stages a daring prison break.

As the rifle and machine gun shots halt the bus, Montgomery manages to climb aboard, up to the luggage rack, where he hides under the tarpaulin. There he opens an unlocked bag, shifts into civilian clothes, and later enters the bus as a passenger.

Inside the bus a dramatic story is occurring. As Letty, a beautiful chorine, Madge Evans is attempting to escape from the gangster, "Legs" Caffee, who is riding along in an attempt to persuade Letty to return with him.

While the man-hunt for Porter is on, the daring escaped convict falls in love with Letty. Then "Legs," played by Nat Pendleton, discovers Porter's identity and conspires to aid in his capture.

The picture sweeps on with quickening tempo and a smashing climax to a tremendous finish. Richard Boleslavsky directed.

Over Fifth of a Million Registered In State University

AUSTIN, Tex.—Over a fifth of a million students have registered in the University of Texas since 1883. From that time up to 1933 the rolls of the University show 251,391 matriculations, according to the latest report of the registrar.

About 20,000 more men registered in the University during this period than did women. In 1932-1933, over 2,000 more men than women were enrolled, while in 1929-1930 men outnumbered women by only 660.

The largest registration in the University occurred in 1931-1932 when 18,315 students entered either for the long session or the summer session, or enrolled in the Division of Extension of the University. The registration for last year, 11,708, was the smallest since before 1928. The long session of last year, however, boasted 7,234 registrants, a larger number by 229 than the long session of 1921-1922. This number included all divisions of the University. The main University had an enrollment of 8,729.

During the period from 1883-1933 a total of 61,433 students have chosen to register in summer sessions of the main University while 123,309 have matriculated for the long sessions in all branches of the University.

A total of 1,063 students have registered in the School of Education. The College of Arts and Sciences records 74,087 matriculations during the fifty years of the University; the Graduate School, 5,841; the School of Business Administration, 3,333; the School of Law, 11,594; the College of Engineering, 14,830; and the College of Pharmacy, 2,293.

Fort Worth Has A New Kind of City Lamplighter

FORT WORTH, Tex.—Fort Worth has its "town lamplighter" despite the progress of civilization since Robert Louis Stevenson immortalized the profession in the days of oil lamps.

This modern lamplighter travels around in an automobile, keeps a sharp eye on the sun and sky, scans weather reports, and orders the whole city lighted up by a simple process of pushing a switch.

Simple enough, but George W. Henderson, genial lamplighter, also must watch the moon and clouds, for this city, in the interest of saving, does not use its lights on bright moonshiny nights, unless clouds obstruct the moon's rays.

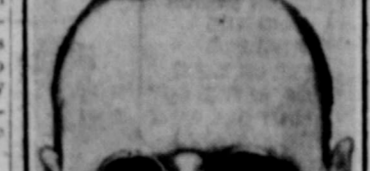

Moreover, this watchfulness has saved the city of Fort Worth some $40,000 in the last two years, in light borrowed from the moon.

Tip For Caddies If Bosses Say "We"

LONDON.—A certain government official went golfing. He talked as he played, and he used the official "we" of Whitehall. "We sneed the drive," or "we ought to have done that hole in five," he would say.
At last the official, with a mashie shot, over-drove the green into a deep bunker (and among other things said: "We have made a mess of it now."
"Yes, sir," said his caddy, who had had enough of the "we" business, "we are a couple of blinking duds, aren't we?"

Health Officer Says Eleven Die Each Day From Tuberculosis

AUSTIN, Tex.—Dr. John W. Brown, State Health Officer, stated that slightly more than eleven Texans die each day from tuberculosis. In other words, over four thousand persons died of this disease last year.

In these days of economic stress, when the seeds of disease are being sown in the bodies of undernourished children, the prevention of tuberculosis is more necessary than ever. Tuberculosis formerly held first place as a cause of death; it now ranks third in Texas, while for the country as a whole it ranks seventh. Pneumonia was the only communicable disease that caused more deaths last year than did tuberculosis.

Tuberculosis has been known for centuries and constant search for a specific cure has been the goal of doctors for many years. However, no medicine, yet discovered, will cure this disease. The treatment consists of rest, proper food, fresh air, and proper medical attention.

The greatest loss of life from this disease is between the ages 20 to 40 years, and its economic cost to families and the State is enormous. Tuberculosis can be arrested if found in its early stages, therefore, the State Department of Health urges that every one not feeling up to par should go to their family physician for a complete physician examination. In this way early beginnings of tuberculosis or other disease may be discovered in their early curable stage.

Boy Finds Head of Prehistoric Buffalo

McARTHUR, Cal.—A small boy's curiosity resulted in the discovery of a prehistoric buffalo head believed to be 20,000 years old.

Burnett Day, 13, was trying to round up some wayward sheep when he picked up an object to throw. It was too heavy. It looked like an old horn. Burnett called his father's attention and J. R. Day took it home.

Some time later, Day began digging into a high bank on the Pit River, where the object was found. In the sandstone 20 feet down he discovered the skull of a "strange animal."

Paleontologists said the skull and horn were remains of a buffalo which ranged the California plains 20,000 years ago. The horns had a spread of 10 feet or more, and were seven inches in diameter at the base. The skull weighed 100 pounds.

Scientists at the University of California began a study of the find.
