We Should Preserve Natural Resources

In considering the huge expenditures proposed by the Roosevelt administration, it is necessary to distinguish between those which are aimed directly at the current depression and those which would be advisable even if the depression should end tomorrow morning. The vast public works and work-relief schemes, of course, fall in the first class. They are emergency measures, pure and simple. However useful some of their tangible fruits may be, they are designed chiefly to stimulate lagging industry and to give jobs to men who won't get jobs other wise. But the long-range program for conservation and development of our national resources is something else again. For the most part it has no relation to the depression. The president envisages it as a continuing thing which should be carried on over a 20-year period, with ultimate expenditures at the rate of $500,000,000 a year.

A program of this kind requires us to visualize the whole country as a unified social organism—a society which must pay as a whole for loss or waste suffered in any of its parts, and which eventually will benefit as a whole through prevention of any such loss or waste. We must, as President Roosevelt says, take notice of the losses that unrestrained exploitation has caused—

"Of the cutting of our last stands of virgin timber; of the increasing floods; of the washing away of millions of acres of our top soils; of the lowering of our watering tables; of the dangers of one-crop farming; of the depletion of our minerals—in short, the evils that we have brought upon ourselves today and the even greater evils that will attend our children unless we act."

All this ought to be a reminder that we owe a very large part of our commercial and industrial greatness to the fact that we built up our society in the midst of natural resources of unparalleled richness.

We had everything a land could desire—tremendous forests, enormous deposits of mineral wealth, millions of acres of fertile soil. We have built upon that foundation. It ought to be obvious that if we dissipate those resources—if we heedlessly destroy the last of our forests, delve for minerals wastefully, and permit our farm lands to deteriorate—we are simply knocking out the foundation on which the whole structure rests.

After we have done whatever is possible to beat the depression, we shall still be under the necessity of preserving this foundation. If we fail, we shall eventually enter a depression from which there can be no full recovery.

Everything Will Soon Be Eimplified

'Dusting the Covers of Texas History' for The Texas Centennial Celebrations of 1936

A few soldiers were outside Mission San Luis gathering firewood just as the sun rose on the morning of March 16, 1758. Suddenly they were knocked almost senseless by heavy clubs. Whirling around, they found they were face to face with mobs of wild-eyed Indians. Father Giraldo Terreros put an abrupt end to the early morning devotional which as he and his companions heard the terrified cries of "Indian! Indian!"

Only a week or so before the attack, Apaches had come racing through the presidio on their horses, warning the Spaniards that the enemy were near. Alarmed, Captain Parrilla had hastened to the mission to persuade Father Terreros and the other fathers to come inside the protection of presidio walls. The fathers declared they were unafraid, and if they were to meet death, they wanted to be in their church. It was necessary that all men available be used to guard the presidio, and none could be spared to join the priests and servants in the mission. On March 15, Captain Parrilla went again to the mission, pleading with kindness, then with roughness, Parrilla did his utmost to get the priests to leave. They were firm in their refusal, and he rode back to the presidio with misgivings in his heart.

When the Indians who attacked San Luis saw that the Spaniards were prepared for them, they shrewdly pretended friendship. Asencio Cadena, Corporal of the guard, ventured into the patio, and peeped through the cracks in the wall. He recognized the Tejas tribe members, and a few others who were friends of the Spanish, and turning to Father Terreros asured him that the Indians could mean no harm. Clapping his cross cross, his black robe sweeping the patio ground gracefully, Father Terreros walked steadily out to join the corporal.

"On all sides, as far as the eye could reach, there was a moving, swaying multitude of savages, arrayed in strange garbs and mounted on grandly equipped horses. Some of them wore on their heads skins of animals, and let the tails fly in the wind. All carried guns, sabers, and keen-edged spears.

All was silent as Father Terreros and the corporal of the guard slowly removed the huge crossbars from the protecting gate. In one minute a mad multitude of 2,000 savages had poured inside the church walls.

The first part of the Indians' visit was seemingly friendly and commonplace. Only too soon disaster was to come to those brave fathers and soldiers at Mission San Luis de las Amarillos on the San Saba river.

Income Tax In A Nutshell

Husband and Wife May File Joint or Separate Returns

Husband and wife living together may each make a separate return of the income of each, or their income may be included in a single joint return. If a joint return is filed, such return is treated as a return of a taxable unit, and the income disclosed is subject to both the normal tax and the surtax. If a joint return is not made by an agent of the taxpayer, it must be signed by both husband and wife and sworn to before a proper officer by the spouse preparing the return, or if neither of both prepare the return then by both spouses.

Where separate returns are filed by husband and wife, the joint personal exemption of $2,500 may be taken by either or divided between them in any proportion as agreed upon. In certain cases it would be to the advantage of the couple if they should file separate returns and one spouse claim the total joint personal exemption. In the following examples, which illustrate this point, the husband has a net income of $4,700, all of which represents earned net income, and the wife has a separate net income of $2,500, not earned net income.

Computation—Separate Returns

Table with 2 columns: Description and Amount. Rows include: Net income, husband ($4,700.00), Less personal exemption ($2,500.00), Balance (surtax net income) ($2,200.00), Normal tax at 4 per cent ($89.20), Net income, wife ($2,500.00), Less personal exemption (None), Balance (surtax net income) ($2,500.00), Normal tax at 4 per cent ($100.00), Total tax of husband and wife ($189.20).

Computation—Joint Return

Table with 2 columns: Description and Amount. Rows include: Net income, husband ($4,700.00), Net income, wife ($2,500.00), Less personal exemption ($2,500.00), Balance (surtax net income) ($4,700.00), Normal tax at 4 per cent ($188.00), Total tax of husband and wife ($188.00).

It will be noted that the saving tax resulting from the filing of separate returns amounts to $28 in the above computations. Note—In filing a joint return husband and wife compute the earned income credit in the same manner as in filing separate returns. If taxpayer's net income is not more than $3,000 the entire net income is considered to be earned net income.

SILKEN SPINDLES

by Laura Lu Brookman © 1935 NEA SERVICE, INC.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Gale Henderson, pretty and 23, works in a silk mill. Phil, and her 19-year-old brother, support their invalid father. Steve Meyers also works in the mill and asks Gale to marry him. She promises to give him an answer in a few days.

Later that evening Gale goes skating on the river, goes through the ice and is rescued by Brian Westmore, whose father, now dead, built the mill. Brian asks Gale to wait while he gets his car but when he returns she is gone. Brian has come home after two years in Paris, convinced he can never be an artist and eager to go to work in the mill. Vicky Thatcher, daughter of Robert Thatcher, general manager of the mill, schemes to captivate Brian. Brian sees Gale in the mill and recognizes her. Next evening he asks to walk home with her. Gale refuses, but Steve sees them together and later he and Gale quarrel.

Lonely, Gale goes skating again. She meets Brian and they skate together. He asks her to meet him again next evening and Gale half-promises. That night her father is taken ill. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XVII Dr. Carr folded the stethoscope and slipped it into his pocket. He was a little man with a very round face and bushy gray eyebrows. He wore spectacles set down on his nose, so that he had to peer downward to see through them.

"Well," he said, sitting down in a chair beside the bed, "what have you been doing lately?" He leaned forward, putting his hand on Tom Henderson's wrist. "I've been feeling pretty good," the man in bed told him. The heavy breathing had stopped but Tom Henderson's voice sounded weak and spent. "I've felt better lately than I have for a long time—until this spell came on tonight."

Gale was standing at the other side of the bed. She said, "Yes, Doctor, he told us that yesterday. He's been getting out for a little walk every day." "How far'd you go?" Doctor Carr asked. "Just to the corner." The doctor nodded. "Too far," he said. "Just what I thought. You've been over-doing it, Henderson. That's what always happens. As soon as a man begins to feel better he thinks he can get out and do as much as he ever did. Well—he can't. Body's like any other machine; when it's used up it's got to have rest. Now for the next two or three days I want you to stay in bed. Right here in bed, understand!"

him. Those walks were too much for him. See that he takes his medicine and stays off his feet. That's the only cure there is—just rest. All anyone can do for him. See that he gets it."

He had taken a pen out and was writing on a sheet of paper. "Here is the prescription," he said. He went on with instructions about the medicine and a moment later was at the door.

"I'll drop around in a day or two," he repeated. "Good night—guess it's nearer morning, though." Gale said, "Good night, Doctor," and stood for a moment looking out at the darkness. In an hour or so the sky would be growing light again. She thought of the old phrase, "Always darkest before dawn," and thought that it was certainly true of the night, at least. Was it true of other things? She closed the door then and locked it and turned to see her brother waiting in the hallway.

"How is he now?" Phil asked. "Better, I guess. The doctor gave him something to make him sleep. Doctor Carr says there's no danger of another attack so long as he keeps quiet. He'll have to stay in bed for a few days."

"Can he stay here alone?" "I thought maybe Mrs. O'Connor would be willing to come in and bring him some lunch at noon and perhaps stop in once or twice during the day to see if there's anything he wants. If she can't, we'll have to get someone else. You'd better go to bed, Phil, and get some sleep if you can—"

"Aren't you going?" "I'll wait up for a little while. I'm not sleepy."

She went to the door of her father's bedroom and looked inside. He was lying with his eyes closed. Gale entered quietly and turned out the light. Her father moved on his pillow, murmuring something that was inaudible. Gale said, "Good night," and slipped from the room.

She went back to the living room and sat down in the big chair by the window. It was true that she did not feel sleepy now—merely tired—but she wanted to be near in case her father should call. She couldn't feel sure that he was really all right again. Those terrible moments, waiting until the doctor came, still haunted her.

Gale leaned back in her chair and thought that the night seemed endless. Could it possibly have been only the evening before that she had been down on the river, skating with Brian Westmore? She put the thought from her quickly. She didn't want to think of that now. The clock on the table ticked monotonously. Gale could not see it from where she sat but she knew it must be 4 o'clock, or later. She heard a train whistle and then there was silence again except for the clock's ticking. Gale closed her eyes.

The bright sunlight, streaming through the window, awakened her. For a moment she did not know where she was. Then she jumped to her feet and hurried to her father's room. He was sleeping quietly. Gale closed the door and went to wake her brother.

"Phil!" she said. "Get up. It's late—almost 7 o'clock!" When Phil appeared in the kitchen, sleepy-eyed and with his hair still damp from the wet comb he had used on it, Gale was pouring coffee. There was cereal on the table, a plate of toast and another containing a fried egg. "Sit down and eat," she told him. "I'm going to run over to see Mrs. O'Connor."

"Aren't you going to have breakfast?" "I've had mine. Just leave everything on the table where it is. I'll have to do the dishes tonight."

She was out of the room and back again an instant later, pulling on her coat. "Father's sleep," she said. "I guess it will be all right to leave him if Mrs. O'Connor can come over—"

Mrs. O'Connor could. She listened sympathetically to Gale's account of what had happened the night before, and said she'd be glad to take Tom Henderson his lunch. The poor man—him such a hard worker and always glad to do a good turn for a neighbor. Sure, she'd see he had something to eat. Vegetable soup, they were going to have that day and there'd be plenty to spare. Yes, and she'd run in the middle of the morning and later in the afternoon to see if there was anything the man wanted. Yes, indeed!

"Tim's brother, you know," Mrs. O'Connor confided, "he had them spells when he couldn't get his breath. Oh, it was terrible! I've seen him that bad, I'm telling you—"

The shrill blast of a whistle interrupted. "Oh!" exclaimed Gale, panic-stricken. "I'll be late at the mill! Here, Mrs. O'Connor, here's the key—"

She turned and fled down the walk. Her breath was still coming in deep gasps as she entered the big room and hurried to her place. She bent her head, fingers flying. Somehow she knew, though she did not look up, that Fisher, the foreman, was crossing the room, coming toward her. She knew what he would say. She had heard him say it to others.

"You there?" The big man was scowling down at her. "Yes, Mr. Fisher." The heavily sarcastic voice rose loudly. "So you decided to come to work today, did you? Well, that's certainly very nice! Made up your mind at the last minute, I suppose—after you'd heard the whistle. Do you know what time the switches are turned on here?"

"Yes, Mr. Fisher." "Oh, you do! Well has anyone ever called your attention to the fact that you're supposed to be here, in this room, when the switches are turned on?" "Yes." "Then what's the idea of coming in five minutes late? Do you think you can get away with that? Do you think we can run this mill with everyone coming to work when they please?"

Girls all around heard what he was saying. It was impossible for them not to hear. Gale's cheeks were burning but her head was erect. Without waiting for an answer Fisher went on. "Maybe you think there ought to be some changes around here—so you can drop in to work whenever you feel like it! Well, let me tell you, there'll be changes all right if this happens again. Five minutes late, you were. FIVE MINUTES LATE! If it happens again, Miss High-and-mighty, there'll be a new girl standing right where you are. Do you understand that? You'll be though!"

Gale said, "Yes, Mr. Fisher." She could scarcely hear her own voice but she got the words out. He started away and then turned ed back. "If it happens once more—" he said menacingly. Gale did not answer. She bent her head and snapped a bobbin off. (To Be Continued)

Range of Jobs To Cover Every Type of Worker

By RICHARD L. HARKNESS

United Press Staff Correspondent WASHINGTON. — The Federal government, planning to spend almost $5,000,000,000 to end unemployment and want, must supply jobs for every type of worker—from bricklayer to charwoman, from steel puddler to church sexton.

At least 2,250,000 of the 3,500,000 persons on city relief rolls at the present time are experienced craftsmen ready to earn wages from the $4,000,000,000 public works fund recommended to Congress by President Roosevelt. The group consists of 1,574,000 manufacturing and mechanical industry workers, 465,000 building tradesmen and 263,000 iron and steel laborers who were self-supporting until the depression forced them on relief between 1929 and 1934.

Other groups unemployed in major cities and towns include: 735,000 domestic and personal service workers—barbers, boot-blacks, nurses, charwomen, building attendants, and sextons; 446,000 trade industrial workers; 408,000 persons formerly on transportation and communication pay-rolls.

Banking houses and brokerage offices contributed two per cent to urban unemployed, insurance and real estate agents four per cent, street railroads, rubber factories, silk mills, printing and publishing houses eight per cent.

The figures, compiled by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration in its computation of "employables" and "unemployables," showed that, in 1930, six per cent of all building tradesmen were receiving relief. The figure now is 13 per cent. The unemployment toll increased from 12 to 20 per cent among trade workers; manufacturing and mechanical industries, including building, accounted for 38 per cent of total urban workers on relief in 1930, and now has increased to 43 per cent.

The statistics were gathered from 79 cities and covered relief activities to May, 1934. Officials said, however, the unemployment situation remains unchanged since that time.

Nation-Wide Line Survey Nears End

By United Press

KERRVILLE, Tex.—A line being surveyed entirely across the United States from north to south is nearing completion, the work having progressed as far south as Kerrville. About 100 men and 50 trucks, working under the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, have been stationed here. The project began in September at Devil's Lake, N. D., on the Canadian boundary, and is to be carried to the Mexican border below Mission, Texas. The workers move in three groups. The first erects temporary towers, the second makes observations and angle measurements, and the third dismantles the towers.

Rootless Teeth Are Rarely Found

By United Press

PITTSBURGH.—Dental literature tells of only two cases where persons have been known to possess rootless teeth. The first came to light in Germany in 1920 when a patient's teeth were falling out. The second case was discovered here quite accidentally when an 18-year-old girl appeared at the University of Pittsburgh's free clinic to have an aching tooth examined. X-ray picture was taken, and it was found that a cyst was causing the pain, but no roots were shown in the photo. Extraction of the molar confirmed the instructor's belief. There were no roots. Further examination disclosed that none of the girl's teeth had roots.

Members of the young woman's family were called to the clinic. Then it was discovered that the girl's father and 14-year-old brother also possessed teeth which were rootless. The mother's teeth and two other children's, however, were normal. The patient's teeth were perfect in appearance and color, according to Dr. J. C. Eeselman, demonstrator in radiology, but had no root canals or pulp chambers. A bony attachment and the gum tissue held the teeth in position, he said.
