

That bill permitting liquor to be handled in barrels failed to pass. A similar bill dealing with pop would undoubtedly be squelched by an umpire lobby.

PEEPING THRU THE KNOTHOLE

Speaking of Ranger's 50 to 0 feat at the hands of the San Antonio Bobcats—and who hasn't calls to mind some other heavy scores that were more than that. We are informed that back in 1919 Ranger defeated by Strawn by a score of 73 to 0, and later in the same year by a score of 58 to 0. It seems that Alaine defeated the Bobcats by a score of 26 to 0 back in 1919 or 1920, before the organization of the Oil Belt, or the scholastic league.

Grim Ethiopian Affair Has Its Funny Side

If it weren't for the fact that a great many men are likely to get killed because of it, the present squabble over Ethiopia could provide us with a good deal of coarse laughter.

Laugh Number One, of course, would arise from Italy's frantic protestations that she is obliged to move in on Ethiopia because Ethiopian aggression threatens her national security.

Laughs Number Two, Three and Four, and upward would come from the pious and solemn attempts of England and France to stop her.

To appreciate this, let your mind roam back just 20 years.

England and France had a fight with Germany on their hands, and it was a good deal more than they had bargained for. They needed help very badly, and they weren't in a mood to care how much they had to pay for it. So, after much coaxing, they got Italy into the war, hailing her as a great liberty-loving nation and promising her a man-sized share of the swag.

In the course of time the war ended, and the Allies got out their knives to have at Germany's colonial possessions. When the dust cleared away, England and France had all the choice pieces and Italy had nothing at all.

Keeping that fact in mind, have a look at a map of Africa. Those parts which are not under either the British or the French flag are comparatively negligible. All Ethiopia, with its 350,000 square miles of land, could be swallowed up many times over in the colonial empires of these two nations.

How did these two nations get those vast territories? They got them in exactly the way Italy proposes to get Ethiopia—by walking in and sticking a gun at the original owners.

With this as a background, then, the French and British moans about Italian rapacity have a somewhat phony ring.

If Italy is driven into this African adventure by her need for colonial markets and sources for raw materials, and if England and France are so desperately anxious to see the peace well and truly kept, one would suppose that the simplest solution would be for them to disgorge a little of their own takings.

Italy would unquestionably settle for a fair slice of Tanganyika, which England took from Germany, or of Algeria, which France took from the natives.

England and France, of course, aren't making any such proposition. Their diplomats would assume expressions of well-bred pain if the idea were even suggested.

It is simpler to call Heaven to witness the wickedness of the greedy Italians—who made the overwhelming mistake of trying to get a slice of Africa after England and France had all the good pieces nailed down.

NEW YORK—The Baer-Louis fight, which is expected to gross more than $500,000 at the Yankee Stadium on Sept. 24, really was made in a flat-bottomed boat bobbing around on the waves of the Atlantic, off the West End Casino, between Deal and Long Branch, where Max Baer was wont to play.

There were two men in this boat—Baer and Frank Paccassi. The latter, a veteran handler of boxers, has been in the employ of Baer since the erstwhile Butterly Butcher Boy shelled Prime Beef Carners from his throne. He has served as booking agent, advance man, trainer, and all-round handy man. Baer listens to him.

Anell Hoffman, ultra-conservative manager of Baer, did not want the scrap with Louis at such an early date. Promoter Mike Jacobs was still putting the pressure on Hoffman on Aug. 7, the night on which Louis so quickly disposed of King Levinsky in Chicago.

Like all others closely associated with Baer, Hoffman knew that the rest of his battler's body had softened with his hands prior to his fiasco with Jim Braddock.

Hoffman Wanted Baer to Spend Months Rebuilding

BAER had married, and Hoffman suspected that Louis was altogether too formidable for the happy-go-lucky chap from Liverpool to tackle on such short notice. He suspected that Baer was gone inside. He saw that Baer needed months to rehabilitate himself. That would put his next start off until spring.

Paccassi had the correct slant on one thing, however, and expressed it when he coaxed Baer into the boat to get him away from his Good Time Charlie beach friends.

"If you don't sign to fight Louis this fall, the public will forget that there ever was a Max Baer

New 'Authority' For Guadalupe-Blanco Rivers Is Asked

AUSTIN.—A new "authority" for the Guadalupe-Blanco rivers, has been asked by representatives of 11 Central Texas counties.

Technically the Guadalupe-Blanco river authority is not new since it has been operating under a preliminary bill of the Texas legislature.

Rep. T. J. Dunlap, San Marcos, has revised the original bill, modeled it after the successful Colorado River authority, and asked permission for the body to seek $5,600,000 PWA aid.

Of that sum, 45 per cent would be a grant, the remainder a loan. Two-fifths of the state taxes paid in Comal, Hays, Guadalupe, Kerr, Kimble, Gonzales, De Witt, Victorias, Calhoun, Refugio and Caldwell counties would be diverted to repay the loan.

Plans of the authority would call for a system of four dams. Two major dams, one at Wimberley reservoir on the Blanco river and the other above New Braunfels on the Guadalupe, would cost $2,000,000 each. Two smaller dams would be built below these.

Those baby bonds should sell well provided they don't live up to their name and keep people awake nights.

Hit by Baseball; Asks $20,000

Balm of $20,000 for being struck by a baseball is sought by Mrs. Bettie Marie Shute, above, wife of "Denny" Shute, famed golf pro. Mrs. Shute has sued the Pittsburgh National League club for that sum, charging she was hit by a thrown ball while a spectator at a game in the Pirates' park last June 6.

Refuses to Celebrate One Day Too Soon

ORANGE.—Born on Sept. 15, George W. Curtis, 84, refuses to celebrate his birthday each year until Sept. 16, because he gained a day during his youth when he sailed across the 90th meridian on an Australia-to-London vessel. On last Sept. 15, he was only 83 years and 364 days old, he said.

Few Cobblestone Streets

Most streets are either dirt—mud now—or ill-fitted sharp cobblestones on which even mules and donkeys slip. The market is plain mud.

It is only when the newcomer learns how all improvements have been accomplished since the coronation of Haile Selassie I, five years ago, and against the strongest reactionary opposition, that he realizes what an achievement they represent.

"The emperor was forced to work slowly," foreigners explain. "If he had forced progress too suddenly on the nation he would have had too much opposition to face. He was forced to reconcile the young progressives with the older heads. He did it, and no educated Ethiopian can deny the results."

Want 10-Year Respite

Young Ethiopians ask for 10 years' peace; by that time, they say, there will be no denying the progress. They point to the young men whom the emperor educated abroad, out of his own purse because of the die-hard opposition to using government funds for the purpose. These are the men slated for big roles in Ethiopia's future, unless war puts an end to all thoughts of progress.

The capital's shapeless, planless bulk lies at 8,000 to 8,500 feet above sea level on a series of hills and dips in the rolling plateau. Groves of huge eucalyptus, with a few pine, surround and invade the town. A few years ago there was nothing—the trees had been destroyed for building and firewood.

On one hill is the business district; paved streets, a central square, European buildings in various states of repair mingle with native thatched huts and a handful of small hotels.

New Palace Is Modern

On the adjoining hill is the old palace, a jumble of buildings of every type and material and apparently put together as necessity demanded more space. The new palace, strictly modern, lies behind both hills. So does the foreign office and other government buildings where American and European advisors help the emperor find the way to progress.

The streets would equal any color picture on earth. American made taxis honk their way through mule trains, cow herds, chiefs' retinues and plain strollers. Every one in the city, plus the several thousand travelers who pass through each day, seems to be on the move.

There are debtors, chained to their creditors until their debt is paid. There are society matrons, well muffled and placid, jogging along on mules while servants, a step behind, carry the necessary

This Is What She Wrote---

Dear Girls:

Maybe some of you think that marrying a boy you've known all your life, and settling down to keeping house, isn't very exciting. Especially when you're only 21 and want to have a good time while you're young.

I thought that. And then I met another man who had been lots of places and had a line almost any girl would fall for. He had plenty of money to spend, too, though he never would tell me just what his business was.

Pretty soon I broke with the boy I'd known so long. I'd made up my mind to marry this other man. I was sure I was in love with him, but—oh, I can't tell you all the rest. I want you to read my story in the new serial "The Golden Feather". Maybe you'll blame me for being a silly little fool. I blame myself enough—now. Anyhow, please read "The Golden Feather".

Yours very sincerely,
 Jean Dunn

Jean Dunn, pretty stenographer who found herself the cat's-paw for a desperate criminal ring, is the heroine of "The Golden Feather." How Jean was rescued by federal agents, how she finally won the man she really loved, make this one of the liveliest, most absorbing serials ever written.

The BLUE DOOR
By Rachel Mack

BEGIN HERE TODAY
RUTH WOODSON, pretty, high-spirited girl of 18, in search of an old store house with a blue door, the little town of Washburn, the quiet old caretaker, HERTHA GIBBS, also known as "PENE" thinks she's ELAINE CHALMERS, whose grandfather built the house Ruth falls in love with the young man next door, JOHN McNEILL, and resolves to stay on while waiting for Elaine to return to Grayson College, some in a sorority. John worries about "Elaine" being alone in the old Hunter house with Penny. He receives Elaine's letter and realizes that the girl he has been calling "Elaine" is a fake. However, he loves her and goes to tell her so, but receives a telegram telling of an accident in his sister's family in Washington and asking him to come home. She got up from the stiff old haircloth sofa and covered over the floor carefully. Then she swept the hearth with the hearth broom and blew out the two candles that burned on the mantle. After that she went upstairs. In the upper hall Bertha accosted her, almost as if she had been waiting. The old woman said, "Are you going to bed now, Miss Elaine?" Ruth said, "Yes, Bertha."

OLD Bertha stood in the kitchen with John McNeill's letter in her hands, staring at it. She said, "Going away, is he?" Without compunction she drew the folded paper from the unsealed envelope and applied herself to reading it. The kitchen was light and the writing on the paper was large. She made it out. They were going to Florence's because Florence's husband and two of her children had been hurt in an accident. "Wait for me!" she read the last sentence aloud. "Your John" So they talked to each other that way all day? Like sweethearts? Her mother, "I don't want her to wait for him. I want her to go." She struck a match and burned the letter in the oven of the stove. After dinner Ruth went out into the tangled garden. The day had been mild for late October, dry and still and hazy. These qualities lingered into the evening. At first it was a sort of happiness just to be waiting. She could imagine how it would be when she heard John McNeill coming to her. First the door would bang; then she'd hear him coming down the porch steps and striding across the lawn to her. Tonight she'd let him put his arm around her... an hour before he left she'd let him kiss her goodnight. It would be their good night, only he would not know this tomorrow morning she was going away. She must go because it was the best time for the other girl. No more faint-hearted things being after tonight! She would leave about 10 o'clock. A 10 o'clock of a morning, she heard, the world is busiest. Penny would be busy at the back of the house. Mrs. McNeill would be in her housekeeping John at the factory. But first there would be tonight and John beside her. Would there be? When it clock on the courthouse boomed eight times Ruth left the garden and went indoors through one of the library windows. She was put to bed. Last night when he had brought her home from his house, she had said to her, "Would I ever see you again? Would I ever see you again? Would I ever see you again?" She had said, "Seven's one of the best numbers on the clock. If it's clear I'll be in the garden. If it rains I'll be in the big room (her name for the drawing room) and have a fire in the fireplace." She had felt a certain of his coming as if they had put it in writing. And now it was after 8 and he had not come. A few lights shone from the lower floor of his house, and yet she fancied an unusual stillness about the place. His car was not in the driveway where he usually left it. Could he have been detained at the office? Could he have forgotten to come? Ruth went into the old drawing room and waited with her hands in her lap trying not to be tense or impatient or fearful, until she heard the courthouse clock strike nine strokes. Indoors they sounded less booming, but still she could count them clearly—one, two, three, and on to the inevitable nine. She got up from the stiff old haircloth sofa and covered over the floor carefully. Then she swept the hearth with the hearth broom and blew out the two candles that burned on the mantle. After that she went upstairs. In the upper hall Bertha accosted her, almost as if she had been waiting. The old woman said, "Are you going to bed now, Miss Elaine?" Ruth said, "Yes, Bertha."
