PEEPING THRU THE KNOTHOLE

With BILL MAYES

"Did you see," one member of the Bulldog team is quoted to us as saying, "what that red headed so and so said in the paper the other day? Just let him wait until after the Amarillo game and see if he can say anything of the kind then."
And so we went out and made a small wager on the Bulldogs against Amarillo.
All of which sums up to this: We have believed, all along, that the Bulldogs had something. We believed it before the San Angelo game and after the 50-to-0 defeat. (Continued on page 4)

POWERS AGREE TO ACT UNDER 15TH ARTICLE

By United Press
GENEVA, Sept. 25.—The powers, led by Great Britain and France, reached a tentative decision to act under Article 15 of the League covenant to deal with the Italian crisis.
Article 15 paves the way for application of Article 16 which provides penalties against an aggressor nation, though a settlement could be reached before Article 16 is invoked.
After Britain and France agreed to act together in urging Article 15, the other powers concurred tentatively in the proposal that when the council meets tomorrow it should appoint a committee comprising all members except Italy, to draft a report with recommendations for settlement under Article 15, Paragraph 4.
The decision to act was reached after conversations among Anthony Eden of Great Britain, Premier Laval of France and Salvador Madariaga of Spain, head of the council's committee of five on Ethiopia.
Under the plan of procedure decided upon today the council after appointing the committee would recess. The committee, which would be composed of experts would then begin drafting the report. The council however would be ready to assemble on short notice if new complications develop.

COAL MINERS MAY PICKET CLOSED MINES

By United Press
WASHINGTON, Sept. 25.—Threat of militant picketing by striking miners was injected into the soft coal negotiations as leaders sought to break the deadlock over the proposed wage contracts.
The walkout of 400,000 miners now in its third day, thus far has been peaceful and orderly and orders from United Mine Workers headquarters here would swing the strikers into an aggressive movement designed to halt the last vestige of activity in the mining pits.
As the conferences dragged on, indications were an agreement that would send the men back to work was near. Contract forms were being drawn up showing belief in other camps the conference would not break up without a settlement.

TREATMENT OF TRUCKERS MAY BE QUIZZED

By United Press
AUSTIN, Sept. 25.—Investigation of treatment of truck operators by rangers, motor patrolmen and inspectors of the railroad commission, was ordered by an indignant house of representatives today.
The vote was 94 for and 33 against.
The storm broke over recent concentration of officers about Fort Worth and arrest of truck drivers for alleged transportation of stock and farm products without state motor carrier permits.
Complaints were not limited to the Fort Worth area. Representative Conde Hoskins, Gonzales, cited traffic between Gonzales and San Antonio. "It's a crying shame. People are being arrested all over the state," he said.
J. C. McConnell, Palo Pinto, said that in these times people ought to be encouraged to earn money.
"The truck law is a one-sided affair for the railroads," McConnell told the house. He proposed that the governor be asked to submit the topic of amending it. He doubted a committee could legally investigate unless submitted.

Some Italians Believe Mussolini Wants Negotiations

By United Press
ROME, Sept. 25.—Some Italians believe Premier Benito Mussolini, despite many statements he could not compromise in the Italian-Ethiopian dispute, would be willing to make a settlement if they could do it without lessening his prestige.
Nervousness was apparent today for the first time in the disciplined Italian press.
Great Britain and France's opposition to tampering with Ethiopian independence have caused comprehension. A pacific tone was continued in an official statement concerning the resumption given to Italy by Sir Erik Drummond, British ambassador, that Britain's fleet concentration was not meant as a threat.

Idaho Divides Country On World Affairs

In case you had doubted that 1935 is an extraordinary year, consider the fact that a United States senator from Idaho is today taking an active part in American foreign affairs, and that he is not Senator Borah.

Borah has been looked on for years as our great foreign relations senator. European statesmen visiting Washington used to make almost as much of a fuss about seeing Borah as they did about going to the White House.

When he tossed his lionine head and pursed his impressive mouth, all the people stood by in silence; and there were seldom a dozen people who could tell the name of Idaho's other senator.

But today we find Senator James P. Pope peering over the shoulders of the diplomats at Geneva, swimming up into the headlines, acting as a semi-official mouthpiece for American officialdom, and voicing the most un-Borahesque doctrines; and it develops that these two senators from Idaho have come to represent the two possibilities open to the United States in foreign affairs.

Senator Pope stands for active participation by America in European affairs: It is his idea that it is easier to help head off a war than it is to stay out of one after it has started. He would like to see the Kellogg treaty made a living, breathing force in world affairs. He is not frightened by the League of Nations.

Senator Borah's idea, judging from past performances, is just about the exact opposite of all this. He represents the isolationist school.

The United States is blessed by a wide ocean on either side. It is more nearly self-sufficient than any other nation on earth. Why, asks this school, should it not stay at home, tend strictly to its own knitting and stand aloof from the inevitable quarrels and disastrous conflicts of Europe?

Now the point to remember is that we must sooner or later decide, once and for all, which of these two policies we are going to adopt; and the course of world history in the next generation or two may conceivably depend on what our choice is.

We can plunge neck-deep into the problems of the world, taking risks in the hope that the possible gain will outweigh the possible loss; or we can retire behind the gates of our castle and concentrate on our domestic problems, letting the outer world go hang.

One course or the other we must take. And it is a singular freak of chance that Idaho, tucked away in the Rockies in secure isolation, should furnish the two men who stand as spokesmen for these opposing possibilities.

Communities in which people have not learned to play together are communities in which people cannot work together.

"OUT OUR WAY" By Williams

The BLUE DOOR Rachel Mack

“If you will,” answered Ruth. Presently they were smoking together, with the tension between them lessened. Ruth said, provocatively, “You came very quietly, but I know exactly when it was. It was—wait now, let me count back—it was Tuesday night about supper time. Wasn't it, Mr. Hunter?”

He nodded. “The day you made the excellent cake with the pink icing, I'm greatly indebted to you for that.”

Ruth laughed. “So Bertha was cutting it for you! What a big appetite you must have had that night!”

He said evenly, “I had traveled quite a distance.”

Ruth saw his face grow grim and shuttered again. She said quickly, “And it was you who took the Stevenson set, then? You'll never know how I looked for those books.”

“Sorry!” He was smiling again. “Then, incredibly, they began to argue about their Stevenson favorites. Ruth held out for ‘The Master of Ballantrae’—except for the ending. ‘I think that's contrived horror, written to please the publishers.’

“Horror, happen,” Duncan Hunter stated.

“TAKE me,” said Duncan Hunter ironically. “A perfect sample of what greed can produce in the way of horrors. My brother-in-law wished to swallow a railroad, stockholders and all. I reminded him that he didn't need such a large meal and might develop indigestion. And it was my father's railroad, at that, my dear girl. I was proud of it. Felt a paternal interest in the stockholders. When my brother-in-law wouldn't drop the idea, I struck him down in a nice, mahogany-paneled conference room. It was the wrong place to start a fight, of course. Doormen pulled me from him, and the gentlemen sitting around the long table immediately lost confidence in my judgment. My brother-in-law, remembering I'd been fooling with tropical plants in the Brazilian jungle, decided to slect me for insanity. Matter of fact, I was running one of those jungle temperatures. Out of my head occasionally when the fever climbed, but clear as a bell the night of the meeting.”

Ruth exclaimed, “What a cruel set of circumstances!”

“And worse to follow, my unknown little friend. They put me in one of those private sanitariums where rich people are permitted to bury undesirable relatives. A doctor used to come to me every day for long talks—a psychiatrist, hired by my brother-in-law, the impeccable Mr. Deal. By every implication known to man this paid fiend tried to teach me to consider myself insane. By suggestion. By persistent namermer. By God-knows-what perverted use of psycho analysis. I grew to dread and loathe him. My mind sickened under his tutelage while the jungle fever I'd contracted was neglected. Eventually, my child, I tried to kill him.”

“To kill him!” cried Ruth in horror. “Quite so. By the simple process of seizing his throat. Alas, that it was not hard for them to have me declared dangerously insane and locked away. I supposed that I had killed the creature. That's why I never tried legal means of winning my freedom. Bertha Gibbs tells me my victim lay at the point of death for weeks, and then recovered. However, that's a mere technicality. I meant to kill him, so it's one and the same.”

“No,” Ruth said, “it's not the same. I think it means you can be free if you prove your sanity.”

“Perhaps,” said Duncan Hunter with a shrug. “But you see, I find myself not greatly interested. Whilled was in that place the consuming purpose of my life was to escape. Well, I escaped. Perhaps that was all I was living for. After I'd attained the safety of these walls a lethargy came over me. Of what use is this life that I've snatched from confinement? Even if I'm permitted to live, my days unbounded, who is going to care except old Bertha Gibbs?”

“THERE'S no one to care what becomes of me either,” Ruth stated.

“But suppose you'd lost the love of your life,” suggested Duncan Hunter.

“I have lost the love of my life,” replied Ruth simply. “My heart's as bruised as if sticks had been flung at it. But life's still worth living. Time will give me something else for what I've lost.”

“The optimism of youth,” the man answered with a shrug.

“You have a few things your self,” Ruth reminded him. “You're not old yet. You look reasonably healthy. You've good looks—oh yes, you have, really. (This in response to a protest from him.) “You've a fine education. You've inherited good blood, social position and money. You've a good mind.”

“You think I have a good mind?” he asked eagerly.

“How could anyone doubt it!”

He said, with a shake of his head and a bitter look, “That what I've been afraid of. That people will suspect and avoid me even if I'm proven sane. I've an unsavory past, you know.”

Ruth faced this thoughtfully. She said then, “That's where the fight will come. Have you any real friends here?”

“A hundred of them, I believe.”

“Then stay here,” Ruth urged. “I think you'd find peace. Take over the old house and make it live again. There's your library, your garden—”

“Ah, yes!” he nodded. “The old garden! There's the conservatory, too. I'd like to enlarge it and put in an improved neatis system. I'd like to experiment with tropical plants. Orchids—”

“Could it be done?” Ruth asked.

It was a sly challenge. It set him to talking like a stream that seeks to break a dam.

Duncan Hunter said, stopping in mid-sentence as he described a very rare orchid, “If you'll excuse me, my child, I think I'd tumble into bed. I haven't closed my eyes for four nights. This is wonderful!”

“I'm sleepy, too,” Ruth said. “Good night, Mr. Hunter.”

She was not surprised when he druously kissed her forehead. “Good night, little friend.”

The ladies are specially invited from 2:30 till 3:30, to see the very latest cakes on the market made. We want you to see that the very best ingredients that money can buy are used in our cakes. The football boys and pep squad girls and band are especially invited after school on Thursday evening for a treat at Schooley's.

Large Attendance of Mothers Mark Opening Meeting Hodges Oak Park P.T.A.

Tuesday afternoon at 3:30, brought the opening meeting of Hodges Oak Park Parent Teacher Association, and from the attendance of mothers, a peppy and successful year of work is in the offing, under the directorship of the president, Mrs. E. R. Green, who graciously presided.

Opening number introduced the room pupils Misses Ruth Shirley and Mary Edlo Davenport, presenting a program on "Health" and impressively demonstrated by posters made by the children. Miss Marguerite Adamson's room also came in for their share of attention during the program, their feature being in quite effectively with work emphasized by pupils of the above teachers named.

A message from the national president, to the associations, was read by Mrs. Green, followed with a fitting talk by Mrs. J. S. Reynolds, past president of the local association and incoming president of the district P. T. A.

"Home" was the outstanding subject, and one well chosen, its host of valued hints and how the success and happiness of all homes is built on the interest and time given by the mothers. Not since the organization of the association has so much lively interest been manifested by each individual and despite the inclement weather the large group of parents gave their support to the president and the school personnel of teachers, and principal, P. O. Hatley, who introduced his staff of teachers in a splendid way. Mr. Hatley especially thanked Mrs. Reynolds for her work and successful efforts in making Hodges Oak Park one of the finest associations in Ranger, and she in turn with well chosen words, expressed her gratitude for his cooperation, the help of all mothers, officers and teachers.

Each officer came forward for the introduction made by Mr. Hatley, and from every indication the association holds high standards, and a splendid goal for this year's work to be attained through their blended and untiring efforts to make all meetings as worthwhile as yesterday's.

As the meeting adjourned light refreshments of punch and cookies were served from a colorfully appointed table in the hall, presided over by a group making up the hospitality committee.

Mrs. A. L. Wilson and Mrs. O. G. Lanier are to serve this year, as co-publicity chairmen.

Open House to Feature Schooley's First Anniversary Thursday

Thursday, Sept. 26, comes as red letter day for Schooley's Bakery, which celebrates the first anniversary with open house from 3:30 until around 8 o'clock in the evening.

Just as the clock points to 2:30 all ladies of Ranger are especially invited to be present at the bakery for a baking demonstration to be staged by H. T. Schooley. When the cakes are finished and the necessary touches added, such as pastels, trims fashioned in artistic embroidery, they are to be presented to the Ranger High School pep squad and football team. This should hold special appeal to all women who are interested in pastry baking, an essential accomplishment to good housekeeping and appeasing the appetite of the whole family.

Open house promises to be a very pleasant feature of the celebration and refreshments are to be served throughout open house hours.

You are extended a cordial invitation by Mr. and Mrs. Schooley and the bakery personnel to attend this occasion.

We believed, and still do, that they can produce victories when they get started right and if all on the team are anxious to show what they can do they are likely to produce results.

Not that we expect any miracles, or anything of the kind, but we do expect to see much more consistent play. The fact that we were cussed more or less by some on the team doesn't matter. All that counts is that they get together and play as a unit and win some games. Not all games but at least some. But even if they should lose every game we would still be for them, in fact as much for them as if they never lost. We have always admired good losers or good winners. Being a good loser is the only thing we have ever admired about Max Baer.

And the Bulldogs must be pretty good losers, in the main, because we have heard no alibis, no excuses, no apologies for their loss to San Angelo. And no one, as far as we have heard, and we have heard much discussion, is down on the team, or any individual, for losing. Losses come as part of the game, whether at football, business or anything else, and the one who can learn to take it on the chin, come back and make another effort, and to keep on coming back until he wins is the one who wins the admiration and the plaudits of the crowd.

Valuable Bull Died One Week Too Soon

WHARTON, Texas.—For several years a persistent cattle buyer sought to purchase a registered bull from Dr. L. B. Outlar.

The physician promised last year that he would sell the animal, valued at more than $500, within the 12-month.

At the expiration of the period a few days ago, the cattleman reminded Dr. Outlar of his promise.

"I'm sorry you didn't call a fortnight ago," the doctor said. "The bull died last week."

Stephen F. Austin Relics to Be Shown

DALLAS.—Priceless relics of early day Texas, pertaining to Stephen F. Austin, father of Texas, owned by his relatives, will probably be on display at the Centennial exposition here.

Some of Austin's books, a chest of drawers, and a bed in which he slept are in the possession of relatives living near Brazoria, according to W. H. Kittrell, Jr., assistant to the managing director of the Centennial Exposition.

J. Perry Bryan, a grand grandson of Moses Austin, father of Stephen F. Austin, bears a marked resemblance to the great Texan, according to Kittrell. Bryan is a grand nephew of Austin, who died a bachelor.

Iowa Schools to Try Football Teams of Six

CRESTON, Ia.—To solve the small school's perpetual problem of obtaining enough football material, five Iowa high schools of small enrollment have formed a conference and agreed to develop teams of six rather than 11 players.

Towns in the unique league are Cumberland, Massena, Prescott, Fontanelle and Richland.

The "midget team" plan for small schools was worked out in Nebraska last year on an experimental basis. The Iowa conference is believed the first formed for a regular schedule of games.

The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Can't sleep? No appetite? You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, sick and the world looks pink.

Laxatives are only makeshifts. A more bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get those two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up". Harsh, laxative, yet soothing in making bile flow freely.
