Depression's Legacy, Fear of Life

When the battle smoke of a long depression begins to lift a little bit, most of us jump to the conclusion that any man who wasn't actually knocked off his feet by unemployment and poverty is a very lucky man indeed...

This idea would be perfectly sound if human beings just didn't have any nerves. Unfortunately, they do have them—and the depression can do terrible things to them...

Margaret Calkin Banning, author, touched on this point in a recent address before a Catholic club meeting in New York. She took occasion to point out that the security which protects a man from actual hunger and cold does not begin to be enough.

"There is delusion spreading over the United States that security is a donation of government, that it is a matter of legislation and new taxes," she said.

"Insecurity is a fear of life, a lack of understanding of life, and a lack of knowledge of how to live—and you cannot pay off on that with $30 a month—or with $200 a month."

Now it is precisely this fear of life—this uneasy feeling that the modern world has ceased to be the ordered, predictable place we always supposed it to be—which is the most damaging legacy of the depression.

In the old days we assumed that certain things were natural and enduring; that the world would always have a place for an ambitious young man, that honest work and fidelity to duty would always reap a suitable reward...

These things were pretty arguable, true, in actual practice. Knowing that they were true, we could shape our lives accordingly. If we got panicky over our prospects, it was because we were worried about our town shortcomings.

But the depression, for a great many people, ended this comfortable old conception. When there are no jobs at all, an ambitious young man can hunt himself blind without finding his place.

It is this kind of insecurity that has hurt the most. We need to make our country depression-proof, not only because we must save people from actual want, but because this feeling of uncertainty and doubt is clouding the American dream itself.

Eastland County Sends Wood For Historic Table

H. H. Wright, instructor in manual art at Reagan Senior High school, Houston, has been sent a piece of wood from the original rafter of the first Eastland county courthouse...

This table is octagon shape, with map of Texas on top is executed in inlay work with native wood from each county in the state forming the 254 counties on the map.

Twenty-five thousand pieces of wood are used in the table, which has taken more than a year and a half to complete.

Mr. Wright, who has written more than 3,000 letters to obtain the wood of historical data, and has had cooperation from nearly all of the 254 counties of the state.

Pieces so far supplied from counties have come from a tree of historic fame, or an old land mark, or the home of some historic character, such as Sam Houston; from a battle site, such as the Battle Creek Massacre, or, from a tree that shades the grave of some noted man, woman or Texas hero.

The wood sent from Eastland to Mr. Wright, shows unusual cutting and no planing.

The interesting data in connection, brings the story of the creating of Eastland county in 1858, from the Merriman courthouse of 63 years ago.

Mosby Eastland, who was murdered while a meyer prisoner in Old Mexico.

The name Eastland was preserved, when they chose the name for the county seat.

The first courthouse was located in Merriman in 1873. An election was held on Aug. 2, 1875, and of the 107 votes polled, 67 voted to move the county seat to the C. S. Betts survey, afterwards platted as City of Eastland by C. U. Connellee.

Mr. Connellee and his two partners promised to give each person settling here a business and residence lot. In this way, 50 locations were made immediately, thus providing the nucleus of what was to be the town of Eastland.

Mr. Connellee and partners, J. S. Dougherty, and J. B. Amerman, also built a two-story log building on ground which they had laid off as a public square.

The structure above was used as county courthouse with clerks office, with a general store below conducted by Connellee and his partners.

The county took possession in fall of 1875 and used same until 1883. The first Eastland county courthouse was erected on the site where the present beautiful building stands.

An effort was made to obtain a memento from the old original temporary Eastland county courthouse in Eastland city, but was futile.

There have been three courthouse buildings on the present site. The first was destroyed by fire in November, 1896, and the second was demolished to make way for the splendid building that is now the Mecca of visitors who pass through the city.

H. C. Davis, secretary Eastland Chamber of Commerce, cooperated in the work of securing the historic memento, a piece of wood from the Merriman courthouse of 63 years ago.

Kansas Begins a Drive On Rabbits

LIBERAL, Kan.—The great out door winter sport of the prairies—rabbit driving—is in full swing.

On almost every clear moonlight night or on a pleasant Sunday afternoon, a rabbit drive is underway somewhere in the winter wheat region.

Sport and useful work at one and the same time, the pastime is credited with holding in check the jackrabbit pest. So plentiful is the quarry that the farmers insist there are three rabbits for every green blade of wheat that pokes its head above the ground.

The jacks, assertedly, line up to bite the wheat, appears in turn, Rabbit drives during the past few years have taken a toll of hundreds of thousands.

Every sport draws the same group in every county. Foremost among the hunters are the members of the high school baseball team who bring their favorite bats, men wild ax handles, discarded automobile axles and tractor hitches. Firearms are banned.

Even the girls take part, swinging sawed-off hoe handles, but their mothers are content to watch the fun from automobiles and wagons. From 300 to 1,500 persons generally participate in a rabbit drive.

Typical of a drive was a recent gathering at Sleepy Hollow school, near here. Some three hundred farmers met at the school.

A line of beaters, containing the women and children, surrounded three sides of the section and moved forward driving the rabbits to where the best club swingers waited as a fourth wall.

As the circle grew smaller, the jackrabbits, numbering several thousand, hopped more and more excitedly. Groups would rush madly at the beaters and would be struck down. Many succeeded in getting past and then watched the melee from a few hundred yards away.

On the first drive about 300 rabbits were killed. The lines again formed around a designated land and the maneuver was repeated. Another 200 rabbits fell. On the third repetition only 100 pests were netted and the drive was adjourned.

The laughing, boasting drivers returned to their homes, tired and dusty and with an occasional bruised ankle, and made plans for the next drive.

As many as 3,000 rabbits have been exterminated in a big drive in which 1,000 or more persons enter.

Latest model lawnmowers are available in such colors as orchid and green. And to think we used to wake up in the morning and howl at a mere rattle.

Irregularities—

(Continued from page 1) said election herein mentioned there was much confusion in said county as to whether or not a voter would have to have a 1935 poll tax receipt to vote, or whether said voters would be permitted to vote upon a 1934 poll tax receipt.

As a result of this misunderstanding inquiry was made to proper officials within said county for correct information to be given to said voters within the county. Pursuant to this request officials of the county published in newspapers within said county information to the effect that a voter to vote at said election would have to have a 1935 poll tax receipt, said publication being made some four or five days before holding of said election.

That a day before the holding of said election, the officials, hereinabove mentioned, retracted their prior information and published information to voters of said county that a 1934 poll tax receipt would be necessary in order to vote at said election, and the holding of a 1935 poll tax receipt would not be sufficient to permit a voter to cast a ballot at said election.

Because of this confusion many voters within said county did not vote at said election, fearing that they did not have the proper legal qualifications to vote due to the information previously acquired from the officials of said county. That said information caused many of the election judges at various voting precincts to act as hereinabove mentioned, and because of this misunderstanding and confusion the election was irregular and void and should now be set aside.

That because of fraud, force, duress and coercion many voters in certain voting precincts within said county were forced and compelled to vote against the sale of 3.2 beer, as it is commonly called to vote "dry." Said fraud, force, duress and coercion being exercised upon certain voters within said county because of said voters relationship to the public within said county. That said acts resulted in a great number of illegal and fraudulent votes to be cast whereby it was impossible to ascertain the true results of the election.

Said fraud, force, duress and coercion being exercised upon certain voters within said county prevented said voters from voting as they otherwise would have voted, and thereby would have materially changed the result of said election.

In certain voting precincts within said county many persons who were not legally qualified to vote were permitted to do so, said illegality being the result of their not having 1934 or 1935 poll tax receipt, or they were too old to claim an "under-exemption," and said illegal votes had they been counted would have materially changed the result of said election.

Real estate dealers believe the lot is underwater somewhere.

Wherefore, premises considered plaintiff pray that the court declare that the result of said election is different from that which he authorities having said election in charge have pronounced it to be; or that said election be declared null and void; or that another election be held if the true results of said election are not ascertainable, and that plaintiff have such other and further relief in law and in equity as he may show himself just entitled to receive, and he will ever pray.

The STRANGE CASE of JULIA CRAIG

THE man was politeness itself. "But it is my business, you see, I'm afraid you don't recognize me, Mr. Payson. I'm the croopier at your table." Payson stood back a little and regarded the other. "Yes," he said slowly, "I recognize you. I'd heard that these outfits show their teeth occasionally—but I hadn't imagined it would happen on Latta's ship. I wish you'd tell him that." "I'm afraid he wouldn't be interested," the fellow answered. "Would you like to accompany me back to the table, Mr. Payson?" The answer was negative—and it was not in words. It was in the shape of a quick, clean blow which clipped the man's jaw and sent him sprawling back against the rail. Then before Julia could open her mouth to scream she was being dragged swiftly along the deck by Payson. Taking her around the waist he half-carried her down the stairs, fearing that in their haste her high heels might catch against the steps and throw her into the water. "The young lady is ill," Payson said to the operator in the water taxi. "Shove off, quickly!" But just as the man was about to cast off the line there was a shout from above. The croopier was leaning over the rail, his hand to his jaw. "Hold it!" he yelled. The man in the boat hesitated, looked at Payson. His hesitation was his undoing. In the next second he was in the water thrashing frantically toward a near-by taxi boat—while his own boat leaped into the darkness with Payson at the wheel. WHEN he was certain they were not being followed, Payson dropped wearily beside Julia and throttled down the speed-bout. "That might have been bad," he said. "Might have been?" breathed Julia. "It was quite bad enough for me." Payson nodded. "Probably I was a fool to expose you to the danger. I could have gone back and played—but somehow I don't like being ordered around like that." "What do you think they would have done?" asked Julia. "It's mostly bluff. The fellow could force me back to the table, and I'd have no redress—at law or anywhere else. But there's always a chance that somebody may forget himself and pull a gun or a knife. You hear some queer tales about the gambling ship. . . . Julia laughed shakily. "One thing certain, I'm not going back to the ship." Amy was still up when Payson brought the disheveled and trembling Julia to the apartment. "What on earth has happened?" Amy wanted to know, fying excitedly to Julia. "There was a little trouble on the gambling ship," Payson explained. "Better get her to bed immediately. I'll telephone in the morning and see how she is." Strengthened by a cup of Amy's excellent coffee, and prone on the davenport, Julia told Amy the story. "And you say that the handsome fellow who brought you home is Tom Payson?" Julia nodded. "Why?" "I know I'd seen his face in the photographs. Julia, he has more money than you could stack in this room!" But Amy managed to overcome her awe to ask, "You're certainly not going back to Latta's ship?" Julia shook her head. "No. . . . I've had enough." "Enough of being a night club singer, too?" "No," said Julia firmly. "I think Tom is going to get me a chance in town." "That'll be a relief," sighed Amy. "This business of having a sea-going room-mate is hard on the nerves! . . . By the way, I think you can go back to Woodford and Brooks if you want." "I'm not interested in that. But what makes you say so?" "Woodford telephoned this evening. He wants to see you at his office. He said it was very important." "I wonder what he wants?" said Julia slowly. "I don't know. But he sounded as if it were pretty urgent." JULIA was silent a moment. Then: "Amy—Amy, I'm going to tell you something that perhaps I should have told you a long time ago. Royal Nesbitt was on the Wood Nymph when we went to Evergreen Island." "Why didn't you tell me?" "He—was with Claira Lee, and I didn't know how you'd take it. She's in love with him." Amy returned Julia's gaze fondly. "A lot of girls are in love with Nesbitt, Julia. And he gives them all a whirl. I've always known that. In fact, he likes to tell me all about them. . . . No, Julia, you had the wrong signals. I'm not in love with him, but he's the best man friend I have. I'd do just about anything in the world for him." "That . . . that makes it a little easier," Julia said. "Amy he was hurt up there at Evergreen Island. This Hugo Nash wounded him in the shoulder. It was supposed to be a hunting accident. Royal didn't come all the way back on the yacht. He was put off at Condon to take a plane into town." Amy grew pale. "And he hasn't been seen since then?" "I—I don't know. I feel as you do about it. Amy, I'm afraid there's something awfully wrong about the whole thing." The Sanders girl stood up, her mouth a thin line. "You go and see Woodford tomorrow. I'll bet he knows something." So next morning Julia stood in the familiar private office of George Woodford, resolved to make her visit as short as possible. "You wanted to see me, Mr. Woodford?" "Yes, Julia. I—sit down, won't you?" He turned in his chair, watching her curiously. "You haven't told anyone what happened on the cruise, have you?" Julia felt her heart beating faster. "No one—except Amy Sanders, my room mate." (To Be Continued)

SISTER MARY'S KITCHEN

BY MARY E. DAGUE

CHERISHED possession of mine is an old brooch of my grandmother's. She went to New Orleans as a young girl to visit a married brother and this pin was his parting gift to her. I was her namesake and the pin came to me, along with the wonderful stories she told of that charming southern city before the Civil war. And the food! The delicious things our New England grandmother had to eat became traditions in our family.

Creole cookery strikes me as a perfect blend of French and Spanish with a touch of the seasoning that is instinctive with southern negroes.
Today—thanks to modern methods of shipping—we can reproduce the famous dishes of the Creole kitchens anywhere. Virginia M. Cooper of New Orleans has sent me some fine recipes, the first for bouillabaisse.

World Famous Dish

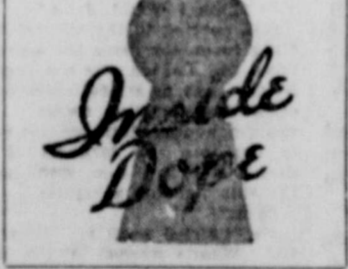

"This is one of the old standard Creole dishes that has drawn attention from all over the world, even France," writes Miss Cooper. "Some variations can be made to suit different sections or the convenience to get the fish. Other large fish may be used. I am giving you the real Bouillabaisse as it is made in New Orleans."

Five large tomatoes cooked or 1 small can, 2 bay leaves, 3 sprigs parsley, dust of saffron, salt and pepper, 5 or 6 slices red snapper, 2 onions, 2 cloves garlic, 2 sprigs thyme or powdered thyme, a little allspice, 2 tablespoons oil or butter, few grains cayenne.
Clean fish and cut off heads. Cover heads with 1 quart cold water, add one-half onion, thyme, bay leaf and stalk of celery if desired and boil until tender.

New Officers Elected

The Junior advisory met Monday and elected their officers for the second semester as follows:
President, Daisy Woods; vice president, Louise Vaughn; secretary-treasurer, Catherine Jane Conley; reporter, Aline Reuwer.
A program committee was also elected as follows: Billy Horn, chairman; Mary Frances Ready, Taska Conklin and Inez Baker.

Mrs. Healer is sponsor of this advisory.—By Aline Reuwer, Reporter.

Miss Grace Maurice Croon, an honor student of 1935 Strawn High School graduating class, entered Ranger Junior College today.

Mrs. E. C. Carville left Sunday for Birmingham Ala., to be with her mother, who is dangerously ill. Mrs. Anne Mayo of Strawn accompanied her to Gladewater.

J. C. Craver, one who has had such experience in service station work, is now employed at the Gulf Station, managed by Roy L. McCleskey.

Mrs. Lora Crews, who is ill at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Tunnell, North Commerce street, is resting more comfortably, her condition indicating a slight improvement over the week-end.

Dr. and Mrs. L. B. Gray entertained in their home, 711 Sixth street, Friday and a part of Saturday, Mrs. L. E. Cox of Ferris, Mrs. N. R. Price of Albany, and Mrs. Newby and daughter of Breckenridge.

Mr. and Mrs. R. V. Galloway and family had as guests over the week-end Mr. and Mrs. Chester A. Young and daughters and Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Penn, of Hillsboro. Misses Young and Penn are sisters

Tomorrow's Menu

BREAKFAST: Pineapple, cereal, cream, crisp broiled bacon, waffles, syrup, milk, coffee.
LUNCHEON: Cheese sandwiches, creamed celery, radishes, graham Parkerhouse rolls, baked apples with cream, lemonade.
DINNER: Bouillabaisse, potato, tomato salad, lemon ice-box pie, cafe au lait.

duced to one pint. Strain and set stock aside. Mince parsley, thyme and garlic and mix with allspice. Sprinkle each piece of fish with salt and pepper, and then rub each slice with the herb mixture. Put olive oil or butter into a large sauce pan and add onion finely chopped. Put fish in the pan, taking care not to crowd them, and cook over a low heat for about ten minutes, turning to partially cook both sides. Remove fish. Add tomato, a lemon cut in thin slices and the fish stock. Season well with salt and pepper and cayenne and boil until reduced almost one-half. Lay the fish in the pan in a single layer and cook ten minutes. Crush saffron and dissolve in a little fish stock. Spread over fish. Put each slice of fish on a piece of toast which has been fried in butter, pour the sauce over and serve immediately.

Miss Cooper adds that some special dishes are included by the Creoles in the fish menu: potato puffs, croquettes, stuffed Creole stye, scalloped, an gratin, Julienne and Duchesse, for instance; tomatoes served as salads, sauces, stuffed and baked; desserts: lemon pie, lemon ice, jellied desserts

Y. W. A. girls of Central Baptist Church will be entertained at the home of their sponsor, Mrs. George Robinson, Tuesday evening at 7:30 o'clock. The party planned in their honor promises to be a very pleasant affair and members are again invited.

Price Crawley, popular in Ranger social circles, left a few days ago for Lubbock, where he has enrolled at Texas Tech. In a letter received by his parents yesterday, reports Price was enjoying a heavy snow, one of the deepest they have had in that section this season.

Hopes for Good Well Rises With Oil in the Wende

With oil rising 1,500 feet in the hole, the Wisdom and Parsons Gus Wende No. 1, in wildcat territory six miles south of Cisco, was running six and five-eighths inch casing Saturday preparatory to setting the casing on top the producing horizon.
The well was bottomed at 3,226 feet, five feet in the stratum from which the oil oozes. There was very little gas.
Believed at first to be the Lake

Eastland sand, operators were inclined Saturday afternoon to believe that the pay was the Marble Falls, despite the fact that it was an encountered considerably higher than that formation was expected. The drill had penetrated the saturated stratum five feet when drilling was stopped several days ago.
Running the casing was due to be completed at midnight. Several days would be required to under-ream and set it, and it would be that long before any adequate test of the production possibilities of the stratum could be determined.
Observers, while hopeful that the test would pan out as a good producer and thus set off a drilling campaign in a large and unexploited area to the south of Cisco, pointed out that there was no assurance of any commercial pay in the hole. They admitted that the present prospects were good, but were not inclined to be optimistic about the outcome. They pointed out that many wells which found good showings played out in short order.
Nevertheless, there were good indications Saturday that the well would develop into a producer of commercial character.

Early in the history of this village it was customary for two or three families to join in digging a well for their common use, with the result that at one time the community boasted about 40 old-fashioned bucket wells.

Now only seven remain, some having been curbed over and pumps installed or converted to other uses. Others were filled and the well houses allowed to stand for artistic effect, or are used for colers, taking the place of ice-boxes.

Women Praise Old Well For Its Aids

By United Press
MACINAW, Ill. — A hundred-year-old well is still functioning here. Housewives in the vicinity say "good old well water beats other water any time for making tea or coffee." The well is 65 feet deep and owned by H. B. Huff.

Huff said the well's water supply has been unbroken since he took it over shortly after the Civil War. Connoisseurs say water from the well is excellent for making coffee and boiling vegetables. Families come from nearby towns to tap its supply.
