When you find a solidly conservative organ such as the Wall Street Journal reprinting words of wisdom from such left-wing publications as the Daily Worker and the Nation...

Having blinked, you then go ahead to see what all the shouting is about; and you discover that it is caused by that never-failing basis for arguments, the relief situation.

The Daily Worker thinks that President Roosevelt has flim-flammed the unemployed in his relief budget for the coming year. His proposed appropriations for this purpose, according to the radical newspaper, represent a cut of fully 50 per cent from last year's fund...

Somewhat similar is the complaint of the Nation. This magazine—figuring that, in addition to the $1,500,000,000 asked for relief purposes by the president, there will be available a substantial sum left over from last year, as well as extensive funds voted for the CCC and public works—estimates the actual reduction in the relief budget at 15 per cent, in place of the Daily Worker's 50 per cent.

But it likes the reduction no better than does the Daily Worker, and it is scornful of the president's hope that substantial re-employment by private industry will make the relief burden lighter.

Now the interesting thing about all this is to find these left-wing criticisms being broadcast in the columns of the Wall Street Journal. The Journal evidently thinks that industry can profitably listen to what radicals have to say about government spending; and it points out that, no matter which way the cat jumps, there is little danger that any jobless man will have to go hungry.

For, as the Journal points out, the president has declared:

"Only if industry fails to reduce substantially the number of those out of work will another appropriation and further plans and policies be necessary."

This, to be sure, does put the matter squarely up to industry. If the government is to get out from under the relief load, the jobless men must be put back to work in private employment.

But it also leaves the door wide open for further relief appropriations, if private employment is unable to meet this challenge.

Emergency Crop And Feed Loan Act is Amended

SAN ANTONIO.—Widening the scope of financial assistance the federal government is extending to Texas farmers, regulations of the Emergency Crop and Feed Loan office have been amended to permit farmers who are not being actively assisted by the Resettlement Administration to apply for Emergency Crop loans...

The regulations provide that no more than $200 may be loaned to any one farmer and preference will be given to farmers whose cash requirements are small.

IT'S ALL VERY INTELLECTUAL

Effect of the change will be to extend to farmers listed as "inactive clients" of the Resettlement Administration, or farmers who are receiving grants or have received grants from that agency since Dec. 31, 1935, and those employed on Works Progress Administration project are ineligible to receive the loans.

Applications for emergency crop loans may be made to the county crop loan committees already set up in most counties. Loans are disbursed through the regional offices located at Dallas.

OLLY and FAREWELL By Marie Blizard

BEGIN HERE TODAY
LINDA, 20 years old, city and socially prominent in little town of Newtown is left last princess after the sudden death of her father.
She becomes friend with Pete Gardiner, political reporter, and shows him a scenario she has written. Pete gets Linda job as society reporter.
DIX CAPTER, with whom Linda is in love, tells her he is going abroad for a year to study singing. He says, "Will you wait for me" and she answers, "All of forever."
NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
CHAPTER VI
LINDA never before spent a summer like that one. She was a thing girl now, and there was more traveling east to spend house-partying on Long Island and the Cape with school friends.
Linda was a working girl with limited time and limited money. Invitations came from the Wilda Jennings begged, and coaxed Linda to "quit foolish job and come and have good time."
Linda was having a good time. And she didn't think her job. She pored over the columns of news she turned out daily, and anxiously with the paper's manager and learned the thrill of a good job well done.
Linda had fun. Fun with Pete Gardiner. One time they went to arrival, and Pete proudly showed her with his trophies - a wriggling doll, a cotton blanket, two canes and a box of inedible candy.
Linda learned to play tennis. There was no servant to keep the Bourne in order, but Pete and Linda played a game of it. Pete taught Linda to swim and, laughing, sputtering, choking, she clung to him, knowing that to touch her was a sign of sweet agony for him.
Linda didn't know about Dix, but she did know about Linda, and told himself he "wasn't getting base." Lots of girls had told it clear to Pete how they about it and Linda showed of the symptoms. But she almost all her free time with
There was the time that they to a state fair and judged bags and jellies with impartial expert judgment. There was time they spent a day beside a stream talking, talking all of books and plays and Pete her tales of newspaper tradition, but never that his heart beat at the sound of her footfall as a shadow on her face was a cloud passing over him.
Linda knew? What woman didn't know? She tried to pretend that it was not so, that was her friend, that their as- sion was to him what it was - a pleasant companionship, only when she spent those comforting evenings at home Pete and his mother that con- sulted her and she felt she being unfair to him. But she little, she depended on him so much that she could not let go. And, since she did not tell him that she loved her, she couldn't say anything to let him know how she felt.

Pete told her tales of newspaper tradition . . . but never that his heart beat faster at the sound of her footfall or that a shadow on her face was like a cloud passing over his.

FOR she had only Pete and her letters from Dix. The letters were few and like water one dreams one is drinking when one is thirsty, it did not quench the thirst. Dix loved Rome. He was studying with Gaetano. He thought he would try for a singing role in a London production. Opera took too long. He had met some amusing Russians. He hoped she was "having a good time." That was all. No more of caring for her. No mention of that last night. No word of the future.
And yet Linda wrote her heart out to him and then tore up the letters. But finally her loneliness and love for him came to dominate her letters and on a cold bleak day, one of those October days that flaunts the coming death of the season, there came a letter from Dix in answer to hers.
"We didn't know what we were talking about," he said. "It was only a few months ago, but it seems like years, Linda, and I think that we were caught up in an emotional wave with my leaving and all that. I suppose you feel the same way. We've been apart now for a long time. You have a job you like, and I'm in this music thing pretty deep. It isn't fair to either of us to be bound to anything as vague as my future."

It didn't matter what else he said. He didn't intend to come back to Linda.
The letter Linda burned, but not before she knew every phrase by heart and every phrase watched on her heart like stones that pressed into her and surged up into her throat, bringing the tears to her eyes.
She couldn't work. She had to work it out for herself, but she couldn't do it and keep her mind on her job. She asked for a vacation and got it. Then she got out her party clothes, like countless girls before her, and, with a new wave, a determined smile and a heavy heart, set out to join Wilda at the Jennings' camp.
THERE were boys on the party and music and gaiety. It was like the good times that Linda used to have before Calvin Bourne killed himself, and that part of her life came to an end. One more Linda had breakfast in bed and sat up far into the night, listening to gossip with Wilda.
The fortnight came to an end and she faced the future with no more hope than she had had when she ran away from herself and her job.

Black-Draught Good Laxative

Black-Draught has been kept on hand for all the family in the home of Mr. W. A. Lemons, of Independence, Va., since twenty years ago. Mr. Lemons writes that he takes it as a laxative in cases of "headache, dull, tired feeling, biliousness."

"And I take it if I feel uncomfortable after a heavy meal," he adds. "I especially use it for sick headache. It certainly is good."

When a man says "Black-Draught is good," it is probably because he remembers the prompt, refreshing relief it brought in constipation troubles. Its benefits are felt because it is a simple, herb laxative, so natural in composition and action that thousands and thousands of men and women prefer it when a laxative is needed.

Christian Social Relation Program Fine Lesson
A theme constituting a fine program was heard at the Women's Missionary Society meeting at the Methodist Church Monday afternoon, prefaced with the devotional offered by Mrs. B. A. Tunnell. Christian Social Relation was not only well given but proved inspirational.

The president of the society, Mrs. C. E. May, presented Bran Garner, manager of the Arcadia and Columbia Theatres, who talked on better pictures. With his remarks well placed the meeting adjourned, and a program on Monday of next week has been outlined.

Postage Stamp For Quintuplets Urged
By United Press
OTTAWA, Ont.—Canadian and United States philatelists are urging the Canadian post office to issue a special postage stamp bearing the portrait of the Dionne quintuplets.

Postmaster General J. C. Elliot reveals he is receiving many letters daily from various parts of the continent, asking him to honor the five famous babies by issuing a stamp bearing their heads. The letters are being filed for future consideration.

The only child whose portrait ever has appeared on a Canadian postage is the Little Princess Elizabeth, who was included in the King George V. Jubilee issue.
