Varying Figures Show Need for Job Survey

It is encouraging to hear that Commerce Secretary Daniel Roper plans an unemployment census.

This is long overdue. It is too much to expect that definite figures will be available before election. Probably neither party would relish this. But it is high time we found out just where we stand-not only how many are out of work, but what jobs have vanished and what new jobs are arising to replace them.

Throughout the gravest depression the country has ever seen, no one has ever known, within hundreds of thousands, how many persons were unemployed.

Most recent estimate by the American Federation of Labor was 12,184,000. The National Industrial Conference Board's estimates have been near that figure. But now comes the New York Sun and says that all this is ridiculous. It estimates the unemployed, in all industries, trades, transportation, and mining, at 3,085,00.

The Sun got its figures through information furnished by 3000 companies. If the present population of the country is about 128,000,000, then about 51,000,000 should be working today, and about 30,000,000 of these would be in the group surveyed.

The Sun found how many really were at work in that group, and figured out the rest in proportion.

The Sun's job is an interesting one, but all such methods are no more than shrewd and lucky approximations. They can be nothing else.

Modern life is complex. There are so many ways of getting a living that don't appear in figures on any recognized big industry.

A widow, left without resources, begins making candy and cake for sale. Is she unemployed? Yes, as far as any industrial tables can show. But she's getting along.

Two boys, just out of high school, develop an ingenious business of washing, clipping, and exercising neighbors' dogs. Are they unemployed? Certainly, as far as any industrial figures go. But they may be making a very fair independent living.

Undoubtedly, in making A. F. of L. estimates, much reliance is placed on union members reported not working at their trades. Yet, many such men, skilled at this trade or that, have developed little odd-job and repair work to keep going. Are they unemployed? Certainly, so far as the A. F. of L. is concerned. But they are getting by, and they are not on relief.

The whole thing about unemployment is that nobody [ knows much about it, even after all these years. General Johnson once proposed a one-day survey of unemployed by registration at polling places, much as draftees were registered during the World War.

Such individual registration of every unemployed man or women seeking work, with the qualifications of each, would give us a sounder basis for attacking the problem than we have now or ever have had.

Before you try to figure out where you are going, it is always a good plan to find out where you are.
