AUSTIN, May 27.—The theory that the state cannot be sued by an individual without permission of legislative bill was wrecked by the Texas Supreme Court today. Everyone interested in building a new football stadium in Ranger, with a gift of $5,629.33 from the federal government for the project, has been urged to attend a mass meeting at the Recreation building tonight at 8 o'clock to hear the plans for the field outlined and to see if the people want the stadium as the next WPA project in Ranger.

The total cost of the field will be approximately $10,000, which will include a section of grandstand, built with concrete, pipe and lumber, with a turtle-backed sodded playing field with an oval cinder track around the entire football playing field.

This will give Ranger, if approved at the meeting, one of the best athletic fields in this part of the country, not only for football but for track, field and all inter-scholastic league events. The field will be lighted so that night football games can be played, according to the present plans.

It has been pointed out that Ranger can secure a really permanent football and athletic field through the WPA plans, with the field costing very little, because of the outright grant of more than $5,000 for the project.

War Insurance Only Half Way to Peace

If a man owned a factory and spent huge sums to pay for fire insurance, but refused to lay out a dime to remedy the defective wiring, faulty fuses, and other defects which made fires probable, it would not be long before his friends and relatives gathered about to have his head examined.

There never has been a factory owner like that and there never will be. But mankind as a whole seems to be bent on making a very similar record in regard to the danger of war.

A current bulletin from the League of Nations association in New York illustrates the point.

The League of Nations budget for 1936 has just been revealed. During this year the league will spend slightly more than 9,237,000, all told. This is about equal to four days' expenditure of the United States' 1936 armament budget.

Similarly, the cost of supporting the league from 1920 to the present moment is substantially less than the cost of maintaining Japanese troops in Manchukuo in 1934. Great Britain has paid to the league, from the first to last, about one-fourth of the price of a new dreadnaught. Incidentally, even this expense has been clear gravy, for the league's rescue of Austrian credit in 1922 enabled Great Britain to recover a loan to Austria of two and one-half million pounds, which otherwise would have been written off as a bad debt.

This, then, is the way the world is willing to spend for peace. For fire insurance, in the form of armies, navies and air fleets, it will pour out billions of dollars; for fire prevention, in the form of the one international organization which can do anything toward keeping the peace, it spends next to nothing.

If there is anything logical about a world that lays out its money that way, the logic is not visible to the naked eye.

A good deal has been said lately about the "death" of the league. Certainly the league has proved unable to check the Japanese in Manchukuo, the Italians in Ethiopia, or the Germans in the Rhineland. But each failure merely emphasizes the world's dire need of a league which would be truly effective.

Unless modern civilization is to collapse utterly in the fires of war, there must be some strong, concerted action to remove war's causes and to compel adventurers to keep the peace. Such action can be taken only through the league or through some organization remarkably like it. How long will it be before the world at large is ready to realize that fact?

As things stand now, we are spending all our money on fire insurance and letting fire prevention take care of itself.

Gilbert Entering Senatorial Race

To my friends in Eastland and adjoining counties:

It is with pleasure that I announce that I am making the race for State Senate which includes Eastland and eleven other counties. I need no introduction to the vast majority of you having served as County Judge of Callahan County for four years, voted and sold the bonds and constructed road through the county, cooperating with the road building program of the country in lifting it out of the mud; six years your representative from the Eastland-Callahan District and for four years with the Motor Transportation Division of the Railroad Commission during which time I formed the friendship and acquaintance of many of the leaders and outstanding business men of the State, which contact I feel sure will assist me in rendering you the best service should you promote me to the Senate. Through cooperation, constructive statesmanship and close attention to duty much can be done to promote the welfare and prosperity, reduce the ever mounting tax burdens and provide for the careful employment of our citizenship.

I solicit your vote and well wishes upon the promise that I will give to you and the people of Texas the best there is in me of service and loyalty to the end that happiness and prosperity may return to us.

BEGIN HERE TODAY
GAIL EVERETT, winner of the John S. Lorne costume design prize, comes to New York to find work. Gail's parents are both dead. She has spent the past three years at MISS CRANSTON'S fashionable school for girls—due to Miss Cranston's generosity and friendship for Gail's mother.

Armed with a letter from Lorne, Gail goes to his office and is told he is out of town. DEREK HARGREAVES, an artist, overhears this conversation and offers to help Gail. He advises her to go to MADAME LIZETTE'S shop to apply for a job.

Gail arrives there just after temperamental Madame Lizette has learned her designer has gone to Hollywood. Gail gets the job and goes to work next morning. Madame Lizette is a trying employer and at the end of the day Gail is discouraged. She forgets this when Derek calls to take her to dinner.

LUCILLE TRAVERS, snobbish classmate of Gail's, asks them to join her party.

becomes interested in you or your work there isn't a thing she won't do for you.

"Oh, I may never meet her again. It isn't likely I'll be joining the social whirl. I'm afraid my work's going to take most of my time."

"Say, you're not going to make work the whole aim of your existence! I'm going to see to that, right now. How about a little trip Sunday?"

"I'm sorry I can't accept. I've promised to spend the week-end with some friends on Long Island."

any good at all as a designer you'll make a fortune. Some of the wholesale houses pay fabulous sums to their designers, and they can act just as 'temperamental' as opera stars."

"Surely they're not all like that?" Gail's amber eyes were twinkling as she looked at her guest.

"Oh, there are exceptions, but most of them seem to think they are gifts from heaven and must be handled with care. Are you on your own? But there, you must think I have an awful lot of nerve to cross-question you like this!"

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
CHAPTER VII

DEREK said insistently, "But it's perfectly all right with me—don't give it another thought!"

They were leaving the Russian restaurant after Gail had refused Lucille Travers' invitation to join her friends.

"But I'm afraid I was rather selfish," Gail objected. "Lucille is frightfully rich. Perhaps if you'd met her friends it might have brought you some commissions for portraits."

"Well, I hope you have a good time," said Derek as they reached the clubhouse.

"Oh, I guess I will. Thank you for the nice evening I've had since I came to the big city."

"Glad you enjoyed it. By the way, the Ferrara gallery is to be open one or two evenings next week. The pictures are well worth seeing. Won't you let me take you there?"

"Of course I will, if you're sure you don't mind taking me."

"Mind? Are you fishing, little lady?"

For a precious moment his eyes held hers. Then, withdrawing her hands, Gail ran up the short flight of stone steps.

"That's the only way we'll get acquainted. I've just started to work with Madame Lizette."

"Oh, Madame Lizette!" Natalie sat forward in her chair. "How ever did you manage to get in there? I hear it's awfully hard even to get an appointment with her to talk about a job! But maybe you had some pull?"

"No," Gail replied, and then revealed the manner in which she had secured her job. "You see, after all, it was only luck," she went on, "and besides, I don't know what may happen tomorrow. It wouldn't surprise me from what I've seen at Madame's if I should lose my job any moment!"

"You don't seem to feel very worried about it."

"Do you think I'd sacrifice an hour with you for the sake of such a mercenary consideration?"

As they reached the door Gail noticed the woman who had spoken to her the day before in the tearoom—the one who had urged her to see a certain exhibit of paintings. Gail was surprised when Derek acknowledged the woman's jerky little bow most courteously.

"It was not until they were outside that he said, 'Did you notice that rather unusual looking woman to whom I bowed as we left the restaurant?'"

"Yes. Who is she?" Gail asked interestedly.

"Mrs. Morton, the widow of one of America's greatest financiers. She's tremendously rich and takes an interest in young painters, trying to get a start. Art's her hobby. In fact, it was the sale of a little water color to her that set my feet on the ladder."

"How exciting!" said Gail. "But, believe it or not, she spoke to me yesterday!" Quickly she told Derek of their meeting.

"Well, you are having some lucky breaks, for if Mrs. Morton

GAIL shrugged her shoulders. "Had she spoken to me freely to this stranger? But, as though the dusky-haired girl had read her thoughts, she started up, taking the scissors with her. When she reached the door, she murmured, 'Hope you don't think I've asked too many questions. You know I don't want to pry into anyone's affairs.'"

"That's all right. All I've told you might be published from the house-tops. It's been ever so nice of you to stop and talk to me. Come back any time you like."

Alone again, she summed up the other girl. "A bit nosy, but not a bad sort." Maybe they could go around some together, for undoubtedly Natalie knew the city well. Gail glanced at her traveling clock and saw that it was only half past 10. She would have time to write to Miss Cranston before turning in.

Opening her handbag, she took out her fountain pen, sat down at the desk, and began to write. "There," she exclaimed an hour later as she re-read the letter and folding it, slipped it into the envelope. "That should satisfy my dear old thing!" A wave of color dyed Gail's cheeks when she thought of Derek. She had mentioned his name!

Port Arthur ambulance operators recently volunteered to reduce the speed of their vehicles as a safety precaution. Two companies will put governors on their ambulances to limit the maximum speed to 40 miles an hour. WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—
Without Colic—And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Thanks to It.
The liver should grow and two pounds of bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food does not get down in the bowels. You should use your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel weak and the world looks grey.
Laxatives are only makeshifts. A more permanent movement is got at the source. It takes three good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get those two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "like a new man."

master. The mocker screams like a hurt chicken, and the hen flutters her drooping wings and bristling feathers sager to defend her brood. The barking of the dog, the mewling of the cat, the tune taught by his master, the quivering notes of the canary, all are repeated by the mocker; and so perfect is his power of imitation that other birds are said to become mute beside their rival, as if their powers were superseded by his.

Now a similar principle of imitation operates in our homes: it is there that its most concentrated power appears. Affection and duty, precept and promise, with all that can sway a young immortal, induce or even bind a child to imitate a parent. A sinner's influence is thus constantly put forth, of which we may be as unconscious as we are of the beating of the heart, but which is not on that account less strong, and the character of a child is commonly just the accumulated result of his parental example.

It is not more natural for young animals to resort to water, and for others to soar into the air, than for children to receive impressions through this channel. Such effects are photographed upon them, and form part of their very existence: they go with them into eternity, either to enhance their joy or deepen their sad regrets. Like the molten metal—delivered into the mold to come either as an embodied symmetry or a distorted mass, the child thus receives the impress of the parent. Home, that is as really molds or models us as the potter the clay upon his wheel.

Men young and old but the young more than the old cannot help but imitate those whom they associate. I remember reading a saying that goes thus, "that as our bodies take on nourishment suitable to the meat on which we feed, so do our souls as inensibly take on virtue and vice by the examples or conversation of good or bad company."

Indeed, it is impossible that association with those about us should not produce a powerful influence in the formation of character. For men are by nature imitators, for all persons are more or less impressed by the speech, the manners, the gait, the gestures and the very habits of their thinking companions. "It is everything," said Burke. "It is everything. Example is the school of mankind, and they will learn at no other."

Emerson has observed that even old couples, or persons who have been housemates for a number of years, grow gradually like one another; so that, if they were to live long enough we should be scarcely able to know them apart. But if this be true of the old, how much more true is it of the young, whose plastic natures are so much more soft and impressionable, and ready to take the stamp of life and conversation of those about them.

There has been a good deal said about education, but those who speak thus appear to me to put out of sight example, which is all and all. My best education was reliance on self, a true independent example set by my mother. A 14 helps come through the rain this morning, and what a fine time they had. Two more mornings, Thursday and Friday. If you can get your youngsters they will get a lot of good, even though they have not been in any of the previous meetings. Several good things are in store for the school, especially Friday morning. Among them an exhibit on Mexico. They start each morning and hold until sometime after 10 o'clock.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED HERE?
Longfellow Deeds, first citizen and champion tuba player of Mandrake Falls, inherits his uncle's twenty million dollar estate. In New York, where he goes to claim his inheritance, he is besieged by cranks, chiselers and justices of every sort. Babe Bennett, blonde and merry newspaperwoman, meets him through a subterfuge to get human interest stories on the new heir. Not knowing she is a reporter, Longfellow goes on a binge with Babe and Morrow, a famous author. The next day the papers scream the news of the "Mandrake Man's" spree. Cobb, hard-boiled friend and mentor of Deeds, begs him to keep out of the new papers. Longfellow agrees but he continues to see Babe, whom he knows as "Mary Dawson", and the stories of his exploits appear constantly in the papers. Babe writes him a letter. "Mandrake Man," says Cobb, "hard-boiled friend and mentor of Deeds, begs him to keep out of the new papers. Longfellow agrees but he continues to see Babe, whom he knows as 'Mary Dawson', and the stories of his exploits appear constantly in the papers. Babe writes him a letter."

Chapter Four
Babe Bennett was worried. She stared moodily at the chimneys and the tangle of radio aerials that stretched away from her apartment. The dumbbell, the stupidest, Babe Dawson, sensed Babe's mood.

"I tried to laugh but I couldn't. It stuck in my throat."
(Posed by Jean Arthur)

"My unfailing instinct tells me that something has gone wrong with the stew," Babe persisted. Babe turned from the window and crossed to Babe Bennett, a volunteer first-aid nurse in Mandrake Falls, rushes off to help them fight the blaze. The next day the papers play it up with headlines: "MADRAKE MAN FIRE-EATING DEMON."

"What's the matter, hon?" she asked.

"Nothing," Babe still stared out the window.

"I tramped the earth with hopeless searching in vain for a glimpse of you. Then heaven thrust you at my feet. My dream has been answered but my life just as blank. I'm handicapped and speechless in your presence divine. For my heart longs to cry out—if it only would speak, I love you, my angel—be mine, be mine!"

Babe's voice was choked when she finished and her eyes were blinded with tears. Impulsively, she put her arms around his neck and kissed him. Longfellow's arms were stretched and for a long moment they were still. "You don't have to say anything now, Mary," he repeated. "I'll wait to hear from you tomorrow."

"Yes," Babe agreed, her voice still choked. "Tomorrow. Please take me home."

They walked home in silence.
