Average Citizens Finds Voting Not So Easy

The honest citizen who has just lived through a primary election is apt to feel pretty blue, if he lets himself sit down and think about things.

For although the primary gives him the chance to exercise his precious right to vote, it also shoves him up against a ballot containing innumerable names which he has never before heard mentioned.

As he surveys these names, and wonders who on earth they are, and why, it is likely to dawn on him that his privilege of self-government can be seriously limited by his own lack of knowledge.

With the candidates for high office, he does well enough. He knows who is running for the House, for the Senate, for the governorship; he knows what the candidates' records and promises are and which ones are most likely to express his own viewpoint in office.

But the minor offices—ah, there's the rub.

The innocent citizen stands in the booth and gets a ballot slightly smaller than a tablecloth. It contains some two or three dozen names of men who would like to be sent to the state legislature. At the head of the list is the instruction, "Vote for not more than 10."

Our voter nibbles his pencil and reads the names. He might as well be reading a list of the royal counselors of Hammurabi. But stay! There's a name he has heard before; a familiar name, as welcome in this arid waste as a clear spring in a desert.

Then he tries to figure out why it is familiar. Is that the man who fought for progressive legislation at the last legislative session—or is it the man who was accused of bribery, and escaped conviction by the skin of his teeth?

The voter reflects painfully, decides that the former is the case, and gives the man a vote. Then, after he gets outside, he discovers that both identifications were wrong. The name had seemed familiar because it was similar to the name of a Civil War general, about whom he had been reading a few days ago.

That, or something approaching it, is the experience of the average citizen on primary election day.

Part of this, of course, is due to the average voter's laziness. He could spend the time and effort to find out about the records of his legislators and the men who are running against them; could, but does not.

But the chief trouble is the sheer complexity of the average state governmental setup. With the best will in the world, the ordinary man cannot familiarize himself with the legislators' records. There are too many of them. It would be a lifetime job.

Genuine representative government in the state capitals must await a wholesale reorganization and simplification of the machinery of government.

In view of the vigilance of G-men, criminals who plan to seek ransom had better prepare to run some.

"After the victory in Ethiopia, almost every Italian in Rome crowded about a loudspeaker." Or, to be more exact, thronged below the balcony.

Following a recent high tide, Tennesseans picked $5 bills of bushes. The young collegian, making a touch, now has a comeback if Dad pulls that old one.

WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER, N.E.A. Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON.—Harry Hopkins came off unscathed from his appearance before the House appropriations subcommittee, considering the administration request for $1,500,000 more for WPA.

The record, now public, shows that this fast-talking head of the vast WPA organization was armed with an overwhelming array of facts, figures, tables, and charts while the hostile committee members, in no position to dispute this evidence, could explode only a few pop-guns in the form of isolated incidents which previously had been hashed and reshaped in Congress and the press.

Hopkins' large research and statistical staff had prepared all the answers and anyone who wanted to check over the WPA program would have needed a more or less similar staff of his own.

When Hopkins pointed out that WPA had 170,000 projects and that only 100 or 150 had been held up to public gaze as horrible examples of "boondoggling" or waste—which he insisted was a good record—none could say him nay.

But Hopkins went on farther to insist that in most instances even those criticisms were unjustified.

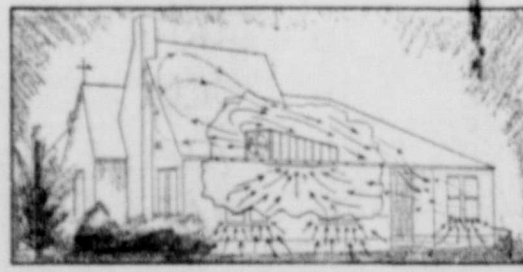

DEFENDING THE WPA white-collar program, he asserted that nearly all its projects had been sponsored by communities, which in many cases were bearing a large part of the cost. He answered a number of specific project criticisms as follows: Complaint that $500,000 was allocated to make bridge paths more

COMFORT COOLING CHANGES RESTLESS NIGHTS to RESTFUL NIGHTS....

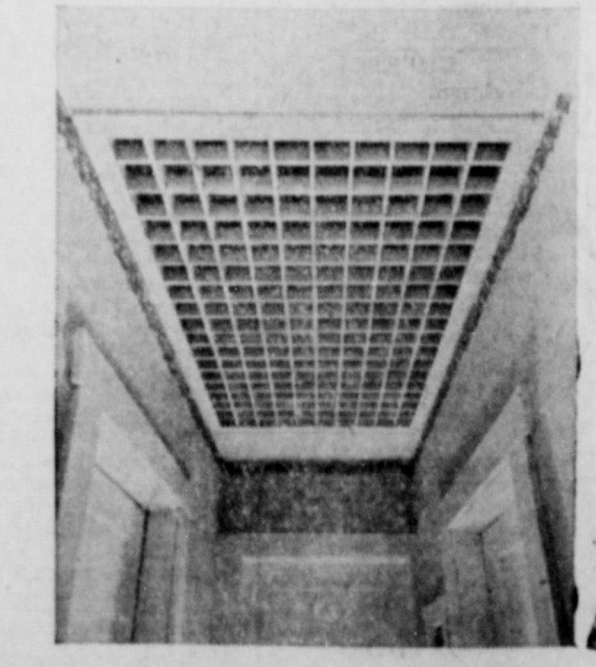

This is How Comfort Cooling Works

A glance at the cut-away illustration above shows how a Comfort Cooling System brings air in through windows, and out through openings in the gables or eaves.

It is this volume of air, evaporating moisture on the skin and clothing of individuals, that produces the remarkable cooling effect, even on hot days and nights.

Everyone knows that in the average house after one of our terrifically hot days it is practically impossible to get any real rest until the wee small hours of the morning—the stored-up heat in the attic makes a regular oven of the downstairs and almost the whole night is spent in restless tossing.

DON'T TREAT CONSTIPATION LIGHTLY

Poor Health May Be the Price of Neglect

Too many people dismiss common constipation as a matter of no great consequence. Yet this condition causes discomfort, and may lead to headaches and loss of appetite. When it is allowed to continue, it may lower your resistance, and so increase your chances of catching a serious illness.

Common constipation often develops when you eat meals that lack sufficient "bulk." Your system fails to get needed internal exercise. Fortunately, today you have a generous source of effective "bulk" in Kellogg's ALL-BRAN.

Within the body, the "bulk" in ALL-BRAN absorbs moisture, and forms a soft mass, which gently cleanses the system. This natural laxative food also supplies vitamin B and contains iron.

Serve ALL-BRAN as a cereal, with milk or cream, or cook into muffins, breads, etc. Two tablespoons daily are usually sufficient. Stubborn cases may require ALL-BRAN often. If not relieved this way, consult your doctor.

ALL-BRAN is guaranteed by the Kellogg Company as an effective laxative food for constipation. Sold by all grocers. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

*Constipation due to insufficient "bulk"

The grain crop will be very short in this community also the fruit crop, on account of the long dry spell through the winter months and the late freeze got most of the fruit.

The Story of GARY COOPER in 'MR. DEEDS GOES TO TOWN' JEAN ARTHUR

WHAT HAS HAPPENED BEFORE: Longfellow Deeds, grand of Mandrake Falls, inherits twenty million dollars, goes to New York and stands the city on its ear with his eccentric behavior. He refuses to see newspaper reports...

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY. Chapter Six

The court room where the Deeds insanity hearing was being held was packed to capacity as Attorney Cedar finished his opening address. Steadfast, Longfellow had refused to retain counsel to defend himself against the insanity charges.

"Come, honey. We're going back to Mandrake Falls." (Posted by Jean Arthur and Gary Cooper)

ness and sworn in. Deeds, slumped in his chair, did not look at her. "Before Cedar could ask his first question, Babe Deeds, sitting next to her, protested, "This hearing is ridiculous. That man is no more insane than you are!"

"What does every body back home think of Deeds?" Cedar said. "They think he's pixilated," Jane said.

That stumped the court for a moment until one of the psychiatrists waiting to testify explained that it was an old English word, derived from the word "pixies," meaning elves. "Thus," he said, "they would say of a man that he was pixilated just as today we'd say, 'He's balmy!'" anything I took his words and twisted them around so they'd sound insubstantial. He can thank me for that! I handed the gang a grand laugh!

"Clearly I wrote those articles. I was going to get a raise and a month's vacation. But I stopped writing them when I found out how real he was — when I discovered that he could never fit in with our distorted viewpoint because he was honest and sincere and good. If that man's crazy, Your Honor, the rest of us belong in strait jackets."
Cedar was shouting now. "This is absurd, Your Honor. The woman is obviously in love with him."
Babe turned on him savagely. "What's that got to do with it?"
"You are in love with him, aren't you?" Cedar insisted.

chased after fire engines. Well, who doesn't? There were five hundred people that night doing the same thing. Besides, I'm captain of the Mandrake Falls volunteers so naturally I'm interested in fires and fire engines."
Cedar rose and interrupted Longfellow's testimony. "Your Honor, this is becoming farcical. Let Mr. Deeds explain wandering around the streets in his underwear and feeding doughnuts to horses."

"Why, you do, Longfellow."
"Do you pay any rent?"
"Good heavens, no!"
"Do you still think I'm pixilated?"
"Of, yes. You've always been pixilated, Longfellow."

"Why, everybody — except Amy and me."
"Who else in Mandrake Falls is pixilated?"
"Who else in Mandrake Falls is pixilated?"
"Who else in Mandrake Falls is pixilated?"

"The greater part of the day Longfellow rapped his gavel vainly to restore order. Longfellow strode across the room to the chair where Babe was sitting, timid and afraid. With one sweep of his arms he lifted her from the chair, planted a resounding kiss on her lips and then grinned at her.

Lie Detecting in Criminal Work Is Labeled A Myth As Devices Merely Diagnose Symptoms Expert Says

By JACK CURWELL
CHICAGO.—There is no such thing as a "lie-detector," according to youthful Prof. Leonard Keeler, brilliant scientist-lawyer, who heads Northwestern University's scientific crime-detection laboratory.

The odd-looking black boxlike machine and methods used by Keeler and his associates in helping solve crime mysteries, come under the general heading of "the (Keeler) Polygraph detection of deception technique."
And the polygraph—"lie-detector" to some—is only one cog in the crime-detection plant which contains paraphernalia ranging from lathes and drills to scientific laboratories.

Keeler defends his polygraph, and once wrote an essay entitled "Debunking the 'Lie-Detector.'" Called it Mis-named
"Too begin with," he said, "there is no such thing as a lie-detector. There are no instruments recording bodily changes—such as blood pressure, pulse, respiration, or galvanic reflex—that reserve the name 'lie-detector' any more than a stethoscope, a clinical thermometer, or a blood count apparatus with a microscope can be called an 'appendicitis detector.'"

Ordinary physical abnormalities, such as high blood pressure and irregular pulse, or emotional instability caused by fear, anger or other disturbing factors, do not interfere with the deception test because these irregularities are brought out in the "control" part of the record.
In other words, that part of the laboratory grew out of the St. Valentine Day massacre of seven years ago—a crime for which no blame ever was fixed.

It was started to make available a laboratory to give expert assistance to police in identification of firearms and also in the examination of all other types of evidence needing scientific methods.

Burt A. Masee, a member of the coroner's jury investigating the massacre, authored the idea, and with the co-operation of Dean Emeritus John H. Wigmore of Northwestern University school of law, a laboratory corporation was formed and affiliated with the university.

Operation Is Described
To obtain body reactions a rubber tube is placed around the chest and a blood pressure cuff is fastened about the upper arm and inflated to a pressure midway between the systolic and diastolic blood pressure. Rubber tubes approximately a quarter of an inch in diameter lead from both the chest tube and the cuff into metal tambours, to which are attached two pens. As the pens fluctuate with each pulse of respiratory movement, recordings are made upon a slowly moving graph paper on a small drum.

Deviations Are Important
Significance is attached only to the deviations from the "norms" at the points where the subject is being questioned as to his particular participation in the crime under investigation.
This polygraph is used by insurance companies, banks, department stores and other organizations. More than 2,000 employees of 52 Chicago banks have been examined in effort to detect embezzlers of various sums.

record made by the subject while being asked a few customary irrelevant questions — (Have you had breakfast this morning?—requiring an answer of "yes" or "no")—will indicate the physiological peculiarities of the individual.

Petroleum Industry Paid 11 Per Cent Of Taxes Collected

HOUSTON, May 27.—The petroleum industry was instrumental in directing to government treasuries last year more than 11 per cent of all the taxes collected by nearly 200,000 different taxing jurisdictions, national, state, and local, W. R. Boyd, Jr., executive vice-president of the American Petroleum Institute, told the Houston Kiwanis Club today.

In answer to the charge frequently heard that profits in the oil industry are too high, he pointed out that for three-quarters of a century there never has been either a protracted interruption in the downward trend of petroleum prices or in the upward trend of prices of products.

The average earnings of the oil industry between the years 1921 and 1932 were only 1.2-3 per cent, he said. In its best year during the period the industry earned less than 5 per cent. As a result of moderate profits and high taxes, Boyd asserted, the petroleum industry is in the unique position of seeing government derive from taxes on its principal income product far more revenue than it is able to make by manufacturing and marketing the commodity.

"The petroleum industry is not objecting to hearing its fair share of the cost of any generally applied tax program," he said. "It is not complaining of the reasonable and economically administered cost of government. But it is protesting against being made, with its employees and its customers, the goal for 301 varieties of tax levies. It is objecting to being taxed, re-taxed, and over-taxed for the support of uneconomically administered and unnecessarily expensive government whenever and wherever that occurs. It is protesting sales taxes on its products ranging from 20 to 100 per cent, respectively, of their retail and wholesale market value, as is the case with gasoline."

When all the testimony was in, the judge again urged Deeds to defend himself and, when there was no reply, the judge started to make known his findings.
At that moment Babe again interrupted the hearing. She ran over to Longfellow's chair and addressed him directly. "Darling," she pleaded, "I know everything I've done—how horrible I've been. If you never see me again, please do this for me—please defend yourself." Turning from Longfellow she crossed to the judge's bench.

"Your Honor," she said, "I know why he won't defend himself! That has a bearing on the case. He's been hurt by everything he's met since he came to New York. Principally by me. He's been the victim of every conceivable crank in town—and I was smarter than the rest of them! I got closer to him so that I could laugh louder. Why shouldn't I keep quiet? Every time he said

BEGIN HERE TODAY

GAIL EVERETT, winner of a large silk manufacturing plant, comes to New York to work. She is hired—due to stroke of luck—by MADAME SCIENTIFIC, proprietor of an exclusive shop. Madame proves temperamental and difficult to work for.

DEREK HARGREAVES, young artist interested in Gail, and her friend, a young man named JACK DEER, whose sister was her roommate at school, she becomes acquainted with NATALIE BENTON who, under a mask of kindness, makes shrewd plans to advance her own interests.

Gail's first real test comes when Madame Scientific tells her to get a new ready for an important customer. LUCILLE TRAVERS, the wealthy and snobbish, was the roommate of Gail's at school.

"There, stranger, better not try to sit up yet." The man pressed his work-calloused hands on Mark's shoulders. "You had a nasty fall. Lucky for you the doctor had to go up the canyon 't'other night. But you'll be all right in a day or two, though you got pretty badly bruised."

"What about the car?"

"Sorry, but I reckon that's done for. I looked it over—but I shouldn't be bothering you with things like that now."

A WEEK passed but Mark Chapman was still too lame to leave Jed Hosker's shack. It was evening and the two were sitting smoking on a makeshift bench.

"Yes, sir, I tell you I'll get even with the Travers bunch," declared Jed. "They done me dirt, turning me out of the Rancho Angelo, and me with my money ready to buy it from Peter Everett." His old blue eyes blazed.

"But wasn't there anything you could have done about it?"

"No! They showed me the deeds and the letter from Everett, accepting their offer for the place." Jed puffed furiously on his pipe.

Then he spoke. "I never could understand Peter Everett going back on his word. He'd promised to sell the Rancho Angelo to me if he ever decided to get rid of it. I can see why he changed his mind and let this gang get it."

A horse and rider came loping along, and turned into the broad drive that led to the Rancho Angelo.

"That's Dan Draffen. The Travers gang put him in the moment they took over the property. They pay him to look after the place. He's a decent enough sort. I've nothing against him, even if he is in their pay. He lets me stay here—not but what I could buy another place."

Mark Chapman smoked steadily as daylight gave place to night and the far blue sky was pierced with silver stars. Hour after hour he'd listened to Jed's stories. He knew now he had come home too late to see any of his kin. They were all gone now—unless Peter Everett's daughter still lived.

"Did you ever think of writing to the man in whose care you sent your rent money to, Everett?" Mark asked next morning as the two drove to town for some supplies.

"No! He'd nothing to do with Everett's affairs," Jed answered. "Have you his address?"

"Oh, I remember it all right, but it's no good to me now." Jed turned and gave him a pitying look.

"I guess they like their money, for they always pay cash for the land they buy."

Mark Chapman nodded, and with a word of thanks, left the building. But as he walked slowly to the parking place his brow was furrowed. Why had the new owners of Rancho Angelo not recorded their deed?

A few minutes later he started to talk of the wonderful irrigation projects that were being put through and what they would mean to the state. But while he listened Mark realized that it was not for farming purposes that the Travers interests had secured the extensive acreage that went with his old home.

Mark had done a good deal of prospecting. He had studied geology and knew that the rock formations were what interested the eastern capitalists—that there might be valuable mineral deposits on the property.

"Well, I reckon I'll park the car here," declared Jed when they reached the county seat. "Maybe you'd like to take a look around while I get the stuff needed. I'll take me a couple of hours, so if you'll meet me here then, we'll be on the way again."

Mark Chapman glanced about him. There were many changes in the town. A big new court house had taken the place of the one he had known in boyhood. The streets were paved and many of the stores were new.

As he walked along the marble corridors of the courthouse he noticed a sign reading, "Hall of Records." "By Jiminy," he said to himself, "that's where I'm going."

It was a young man who produced the county maps, for which Mark asked. When he mentioned that he'd been away from the valley for 40 years, the youngster exclaimed, "Then I guess you'll find a lot of changes. Property's been changing hands since the Travers Mining and Development company came down here."

"Well, well!" commented Mark, still studying the maps. "Oh, there's the Rancho Angelo. Who owns that now?"

"That hasn't changed hands. Someone told me it's still in the same family, though I guess most of them are gone."

"And who owns this?" Mark asked, pointing to the adjacent land, for he had taken off his glasses.

"That's a Travers property, and so's this, and this."

"Seems like they'll soon be owning the state!" Mark said. Then he asked, "What do folks think of the Travers Corporation?"

"I guess they like their money, for they always pay cash for the land they buy."

Watch Garden And Orchards for Insects Says Cook

Eastland county is fairly well populated with insects this year is the opinion of the county agent as indicated by the number of requests for control information received from farmers, truck growers and owners of shade trees and shrubs. It is likely that a lot of people have overlooked infestations which have done damage. Careful watch for insect infestations during the next two months is urged as control in the early stages is much easier than later after the "bugs" have done damage.

Aphids or soft bodies plant lice, squash bugs, harlequin cabbage bugs, cucumber beetles and various sucking insects found on trees are the type of insects that suck the sap from the plant with a bill or proboscis. These insects must be killed with a contact spray which stops up the breathing pores, or by mechanical means such as catching and burning.

Insects that eat the leaves, such as Colorado potato beetles and leafworms and cabbage worms can be killed by dusting or spraying the leaves with a stomach poison which the insects eat with the leaves.

Cutworms and grasshoppers are easily killed by putting out a poison bran mash which they eat readily.

The following suggestions are offered in controlling some of the most common insects:

Aphids or lice on vegetables, shrubs or trees.

Spray in the heat of the day with a mixture of 1 ounce Black Leaf 40, quarter pound whale oil or laundry soap and 6 gallons of water. This must be sprayed on the insects and with as much pressure as possible.

Sucking insects on trees: If the insects are soft-bodied, use the same mixture as for aphids.

Cucumber beetles: Use the same mixture as recommended for aphids and add one-third pound of arsenate of lead. This does not kill as many of the beetles as it drive away. The arsenate of lead helps control the worm stage of the beetle, which eats very small holes in tomatoes and other vegetables. The cucumber beetles is very hard to control.

Squash Bugs and Cabbage Bugs: No spray is very effective for these. Either hand pick them off the plants or lay out small boards or shingles around the plants. The insects gather on the under side of these boards at night. Early in the morning pick the boards up gently and jar the bugs into a container partly filled with water and kerosene.

Potato Beetles, Leafworms, Cabbage Worms, Bagworms, or any other leaf eating insect:

Spray the plants effected with a mixture of 1 ounce of arsenate of lead per gallon of water or dust the plants lightly with a mixture of 4 parts of flour or lime and 1 pound arsenate of lead. Vegetables so dusted should be washed before eating.

Grasshoppers and cutworms: Put out a poison bran mash. For grasshoppers this should be well scattered around the field being infested. The mixture should be dry enough that each flake of bran will separate. For cutworms, place half teaspoonful of the mixture under each plant being effected. The mash should be put out late in the afternoon as the worms feed at night. The poison bran mash is made as follows: 100 pounds bran, 5 pounds paris green or white arsenic, 4 pounds amyl acetate, 2 gallons blackstrap molasses or sorghum molasses. About 8 gallons water. Just enough water should be used to make a mixture that the least bit of water can be squeezed from with the hand. A sloppy mixture is unsatisfactory.

Production Credit Organization Aid To State's Farmers

Production Credit Associations were established strictly for the use and benefit of American farmers. They are non-profit cooperative organizations designed to assist farmers in becoming financially independent. Borrowers are the only ones that can vote; they elect their own officers.

For many years farmers over the United States have been urging the federal government to organize agencies which would be adapted to meet farmers' requirements. The extreme need for a new type of farmers' credit organization was demonstrated during the depression of 1920 and 1921, and in 1923.

Congress provided for the establishment of 12 federal intermediate credit banks over the country to supply this need. It found that only in a very few farming communities could sufficient capital be raised to organize a credit agency; therefore the federal intermediate banks were unable to be of much assistance to the great mass of farmers.

In 1933, after farmers had gone through four years of severe depression, congress decided that the situation was serious enough to warrant its assistance in capitalizing local farmers' credit agencies. In the farm credit act of 1933, congress provided for the organization of Production Credit Associations all over the United States, for the purpose of establishing a permanent dependable source of cheap operating credit for American farmers and stock raisers. These associations were not organized to make profit, but to render service to agricultural producers.

Farmers are awakening to the fact that this is the farmers' own organization. It loans money to its borrowers at 5 per cent, and they pay for the money only for the time it is used.

The Stephenville association serves this section, and it is in fine condition, as its business has increased over 200 per cent in 1936 over the same period in 1935.

Those interested in information concerning the loans may see Rufus Cox, Rising Star, or Milton Newman, Eastland.

Georgia Widows Seek Texas Husbands

DALLAS.—Three widows from Atlanta, Ga., who sign their names Mary, Margaret, and Martha—want to use the Texas Centennial as a road to romance.

"We have looked upon Texas and your fine physical specimens of manhood," they wrote William A. Webb, director of the Dallas exposition. "As this is Leap Year, we do not see why we could not exercise a woman's prerogative and ask cooperation in developing friendships."

Webb read the letter and marked it: "File."
