States Are Confined By Own Sovereignty

Apparently the states of this Union are to be saved from the encroachment of federal power whether they like it or not. The supreme court decision throwing out the municipal bankruptcy act enshrines the sovereignty of the states in a higher sphere of untouchability than the states themselves are likely to want.

This fact, it is worth remembering, did not involve any radical new conception of the function of government, as did such measures as the NRA and the AAA.

It was not part of an attempt to erect a new philosophy of government. It was simply a means by which local units were to be rescued from an intolerable financial situation.

At the beginning of 1934, slightly more than 2000 cities, counties, and other political subdivisions were in default on their bonds. The face value of the bonds in default ran to approximately a billion dollars; the governmental units involved were scattered across 41 states.

Something had to be done. The debtors could raise no more money, and the creditors could collect no more.

A creditor could, indeed, go to court and get a mandamus writ ordering the debtor to tax, but where the tax values were exhausted-as was often the case-this was a meaningless gesture.

The state legislatures could give no help. Under the Constitution they can pass no laws impairing the obligation of existing contracts. A state insolvency act, therefore, could do nothing to obligations already incurred. Unless the federal government could help, no one could.

So Congress passed the municipal bankruptcy act. This provided that a local unit of government which was in default could readjust its debt to its capacity to pay, under very definite limitations.

It had to have the consent of two-thirds of its creditors It had to have the approval of a federal judge; and it had to have the consent of the state in which it was situated.

This is the law which the supreme court has just nullified, on the ground that it is an infringement on state sov ereignty.

Behold, now, the odd tangle in which the ruling leaves

Here was a case in which the states, under the Constitution, were specifically prevented from acting. The action provided for in the law could be taken only with the specific consent of the states involved. And yet the law is thrown out on the ground that it impairs state sovereignty.

GAIL EVELLETT, ambitious to become a des egner, comes to New York and—dise to a stroke of luck—is hired by MADAME LIZETTE, proprietor of an 'xclusive shop. Madame proves temperamental and difficult to work for.

DEREK MARGREAVES, young artist, is leterested in Gail and offers her friendly advice. Frequently she aces DICK SEARLES, whose sister, ROSEMARY, was her roomwite at school.

Meanwhite, in Arlsona, MARK CHAPMAN, long a wanderer, returns to find his old home in the hands of the Travers Mining Co. Mark surgects the deal is crooked. He does not know the whereabouts of his nieer, Gail, the rightful owner of the property. REX HALL, Madame Lisette's son, is representing the Travers company.

Mar's confides in his friend, old ED HOSKEER, and writes a letter to GILES HARDING, New ork lawyer.

Der's asks Gajl to marry him and she agrees.

A newspaper fashion writer raises Gail's work and, in a rage of jealousy, Madame Lizette disherges her. Gall applies for ord, in a wholesaile house, but is old another designer has just een employed. CHAPTER XX

GAIL'S spirits drooped as she stepped into the elevator o hopefully about this chance yet nothing had come of it! What would she do next? She did not want to tell Derek. # WPA Shutdown Draws a Protest

By United Press

DALHART .- Union county, N M., of which Clayton is the cour ty seat, is protesting vigorously the Works Progress Administra tion order for a shutdown on all projects in the county.

The order was issued in hope that Union county would furnish its quota of workers for the giant Conchas river dam project at Tu

Clayton business men declare that to fill the quota would require moving of many farmers and their families to the damsite. The objection is based on a present favorable outlook for farming in the section.
