States' Rights Theory
Struck By Own Dart

The U. S. Supreme Court has many remarkable achievements to its credit, but nothing can ever excel the sheer virtuosity of the sleight-of-hand performance which passed states' rights from one fist to the other, and then made them disappear utterly in thin air.

Observe the neat way in which this was accomplished.
The court led off with the Guffey decision. In this case it ruled that the federal government could not try to remedy evil working conditions through the fixing of minimum wage laws, on the ground that this was a right of the states.

Then came the New York minimum wage law. Here, apparently, was the answer to the Guffey case. This attempt to fix minimums was the work of a state, not of the federal government; an exercise of the right which presumably had been preserved by invalidation of the Guffey act.

But when the smoke had blown away, the New York law had gone the way of the Guffey law. The "states' right" which the Guffey act was killed to preserve turned out to be non-existent.

That leaves us out in the middle of no man's land, with our supreme legal authority ruling that neither state nor national government can act against such things as sweatshops; and it is a ruling which should cause far more dismay to the old-fashioned believer in states' rights than to the most radical of New Dealers.

For the whole case for states' rights rests upon the belief that our nation can best make progress by letting the individual states handle such problems in their own way.

Our age has grown so complex, the interplay of economic forces affects the life of the individual so profoundly, that the problems have to be handled by someone. They can't be ignored.

And the old-line believer in democracy and freedom is likely to prefer that the states do the handling.

For it is in that way that we may be protected against too great regimentation by the central government. We don't avoid the erection of an oppressively strong federal power by giving the power to nobody at all; we avoid it by giving the power to the states.

A state which can protect the economic interests of its citizens is the best of all guarantees against over-reaching at Washington.

A state which can protect the economic interests of its citizens is the best of all guarantees against over-reaching at Washington.

It is this thing which has been struck down by the recent supreme court decision. The states no longer have the power they need. The first line of our defense against regimentation and centralization of government has been overwhelmed.

The venerable justices have given aid and comfort to their own worst enemies. The only people who can rejoice over the decision are those who hope to see all power to deal with economic problems lodged in Washington.

THE COVERED BANDWAGON

New Jobs Await Trained Women

PITTSBURG, Pa. — The average American woman is drifting further from her traditional place in the kitchen, according to a survey made by Quax, an honorary scientific fraternity for women at the University of Pittsburgh.

The scientific co-eds came to their conclusions while studying problems encountered in a quest of employment. Their detailed survey represented an effort to clarify and classify the many-sided difficulties in job-seeking and their relationship with the university graduate.

Interviews, letters and phone calls to and from a thousand personal directors of business organizations and public institutions revealed that many positions are waiting for trained women.

Opportunities are available, it was found, in a wide variety of business, educational and scientific spheres. Almost every branch of city, state and federal departments indicated that women, especially those trained in science, are needed.

The many possibilities included almost every phase of activity except that centered by the kitchen. The fate of the family's meals, it was strongly indicated, is facing highly uncertain times.

Life in the Nude Centennial Problem

DALLAS.—Life in the nude, called "vulgarity" in some quarters and "art" in others, was a principal subject of conversation during the Texas Centennial Exposition's first days.

Concessionaires have spared no pains to present their wares in artistic backgrounds. Probably the show most pleasing to aesthetes is an "apple dancer," a comely miss who twirls gracefully behind a costume consisting mainly of an apple. Some critics on the back row have complained that the "apple" really is nearer the size of a basketball.

A "life class" presented by another midway attraction has lured many customers at 25 cents a person. The customer becomes a "student" on payment of that sum, and is directed to the studio provided with a score of benches, easels, crayon and drawing paper. With the class seated, the "instructor" draws back the curtain on a "subject" attired exactly as the barker had promised.

The same concession offers programs billed as "A former Dallas debutante dressed as Lady Godiva."

Other shows featuring life unexposed include a nudist colony, a French theatre, and several sets of dancers trained to carry on the world fair traditions of Little

The GLAMOROUS ADVENTURE

BEGIN HERE TODAY

GAIL EVERETT, ambitious to become a designer, comes to New York and—due to a stroke of luck—is hired by MADAME LIZETTE, proprietor of an exclusive shop.

MADAME LIZETTE proves temperamental and difficult to work for.

DEREK HARGREAVES, young artist, is interested in Gail. She also frequently sees DICK SEARLES, whose sister, ROSAMARY, was her roommate at school.

Meanwhile, in Arizona, Gail's uncle, MARK CHAPMAN, returns home after years of wandering, and finds his old home in the hands of the Traverses Mining Co. Mark suspects the deal is crooked and tries to touch with GILES HARDING, New York lawyer. Harding tries to locate Gail.

Derek makes Gail to marry him and she agrees. Later a misunderstanding comes between them and LUCILLE TRAVERS, who wants Derek for herself, tells him that Gail is to marry Dick Searles.

Giles Harding comes to see Gail and tells her about the plot to force her to marry Dick Searles. Gail's pleasure in learning that she is to be married is marred because that word has come from Derek.

Gail, after another sweep the Traverses company into financial ruin, Gail's father, Derek, in love with Lucille, expects to hold that they will be married soon.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXIV

NATALIE settled herself comfortably against a pillow. "I don't see why you haven't married Dick Searles long ago," she said, eyeing Gail. "He's an awfully nice chap—and then look at all the money he has. I know he's crazy about you. They all are; you'd never have any in-law troubles. I'm sorry I didn't see Mr. Searles—"

The visit on Long Island was over and the two girls were back at the clubhouse, discussing the week-end.

"Yes," Gail agreed. "I'm sorry, too, that he wasn't there, but he was called away unexpectedly."

"To Arizona, wasn't it?"

"Yes."

"Is he interested in mines too?"

"Oh, he's interested in lots of different things. Perhaps mining is one of them, though I think this trip was in connection with some land he owns. Rosemary said something about an irrigation project. She thinks it would be a grand idea for us to fly out there with Dick and bring her father home."

"Oh, that would be great! Then you could meet your uncle and see your property," exclaimed Natalie.

"Yes, that's what she said."

"Why don't you do it, Gail?"

"Maybe I will."

GAIL tossed the morning newspaper aside. She knew she must make up her mind about a number of things. There was the proposed trip to Arizona and she did want to meet her long-lost uncle. Then there was Dick—he was still urging her to marry him. He'd asked her again this last week-end and again she'd turned him down. She really ought to do something about an apartment, but that hinged partly on her plans after her trip to the west.

Her little room was growing hotter by the minute, for it got the morning sun. Suddenly Gail thought of the announcement she had read about the gardens of Mrs. Peter Hinchcliffe on Long Island being open to the public today, a benefit affair for crippled children.

She picked up the telephone and learned that a train would leave in half an hour. She decided to go. It would be lovely to spend a day beneath the green, young-leaved trees, to hear birds sing instead of the raucous noises of Manhattan.

Perhaps away from all the clamor and dirt of the city she would be able to make up her mind about her problems.

"WELL," Mrs. Morton said, smiling, "this is a pleasure. I'm helping Mrs. Hinchcliffe and I'll be busy meeting all those people—and her dark eyes roved across the landscape—but I must have a talk with you, Gail. Won't you have tea with me about 4 o'clock? I'll meet you at the door of the Marquise."

"That will be lovely," Gail answered, though Mrs. Morton's keen eyes were quick to sense that beneath the girl's apparent brightness something was troubling her.

Bluebirds were darting about the old trees whose blossoms had already given place to miniature editions of the fine fruit they would bear later on. Gorgeous butterflies flew toward the garden and now and then there came the sharp "Tap, tap" of a woodpecker, carrying on his crusade for the extermination of grubs. How peaceful it was! Too peaceful even to disturb one's self solving problems.

"So you've enjoyed the afternoon? I'm so glad," declared Mrs. Morton later, adding a lump of sugar to her tea.

"Oh, it's been beautiful, but I've been terribly lazy. I thought when I came out here I'd have peace to think out some of my problems, but I'm no nearer to any conclusions."

"Have you so many problems then?"

"Quite a few," Gail told about her changed financial circumstances and the end of her career at Madame Lizette's.

"What about Derek Hargreaves? When are you going to marry him?"

Gail was silent.

"Then you haven't seen him yet?" Mrs. Morton continued. "I think that is a mistake. That young man loves you, but remember a less scrupulous woman than you can usually turn a man's heart where she wants it—no matter how fine or strong he is, perhaps because he is so gallant. Besides, if a man feels that the woman he loves is neglecting him he has an excuse for straying."

That night Gail could not settle down to anything. She had turned down an invitation from Natalie to join her and some other girls who were going to some affair.

At last she pulled on a hat, deciding to go for a walk. It would at least kill time. She sauntered along aimlessly. Then suddenly she found herself before the building where Derek's studio was. Sometimes he worked at night. Gail glanced up and saw that a dim light gleamed against the long north windows. So he was working tonight!

She walked on more slowly. How could Derek paint in that light? But perhaps he was not working. Mrs. Morton had suggested that Gail should go to his studio and explain things. But she had nothing to explain!

She was on Park avenue now, but it was not the Park avenue of winter when luxurious limousines sped along and women, richly dressed in furs that cost fortunes and jewels worth ransoms, pass into magnificent hotels, accompanied by immaculate escorts. Tired mothers from less favored streets were dragging fretful children by their sticky little hands, seeking a breath of fresh air.

A car stopped at the curb and Gail saw a tall young woman, swathed in an evening wrap of sheer black velvet, step quickly within the tessellated hall of a handsome apartment house.

Could Gail have followed she would have seen the young woman slip off the cape as she entered Don Luis Doro's apartment. It was Lucille Travers.

"Luis," she whispered in tragic tones, as the Japanese butler closed the door of the library. "I've made up my mind. I take me away from New York."

"Beautiful. I knew you'd come to me at last." The swarthy, middle-aged beef baron from the Argentine, pressed his lips to Lucille's.

Beggars for a long time have been making a practice of traveling on railways without tickets so that arrest will lead them to the "comforts" provided in the prisons.

Officials are almost at their wits' end to deal with this "racket." Now they propose amendments for ticketless travelers.

They estimate that 2,700,000 persons have been getting free rides on the trains annually, representing a loss to the railways of nearly $2,000,000.

IN G-MAN COMEDY

"Don't worry—even if you haven't caught any Public Enemies yet, you will some day, if you're a good boy!" is what Adrienne Marden is telling Jack Haley, in the scene above from "F-Man," new comedy of a would-be G-Man, current attraction at the Arcadia Theatre.

Woman Locates Two Lots She Has Owned 14 Years
Mrs. M. M. Byrd of Corsicana, who at one time owned and operated a 40-room hotel in Ranger known as the Byrd hotel, was a visitor in Ranger Tuesday morning.

Mrs. Byrd visited the Times office and inquired about the owner of the two lots west of the Times building, which she said she believed she owned. A checkup revealed that she had been paying taxes on the lots since she left here in 1922 and that she had title to them, but did not remember the exact location.

When she came to Ranger Tuesday morning she drove around looking for the lots and finally located them. She was enroute home to Corsicana after a visit in California.

Flag Day—
The program was opened with introductory remarks by Dr. Harry A. Logsdon, past exalted ruler and past president of the Texas Elks association, who spoke briefly on some of the outstanding achievements of Elksdom and who explained the purpose of the order.

Following the introductory remarks the Ranger band played the Star Spangled Banner, which was followed by a prayer by Rev. H. B. Johnson, Dr. Logsdon then recognized patriotic orders, having veterans of the Spanish-American war rise to be recognized.

L. H. Fiewelen presented a talk on the flags of Texas, giving an interesting history of the state from the landing of the first explorers under the Spanish flag, the reign of France and the French flag, the period when the Mexican flag was flown, leading down to the flag of the Republic of Texas, the United States flag, the flag of the Confederacy and finally Old Glory again. Each flag was brought forward by members of the local Boy Scout troop as the talk progressed.

Waltie Reed, an Eagle Scout, assisted by another group of Scouts, presented the evolution of the American flag, with each flag being carried to the front by scouts as it was mentioned.

Local and visiting officers of the Oil Belt Elks lodges erected a liberty bell as part of the ceremony after which the audience joined singing two verses of America, lead by Hal Hunter.

Judge Frank S. Roberts of Breckenridge delivered the principal speech of the evening, which was a beautiful oration touching upon the spirit of America, which has led the country into triumphs in all the wars in which the nation, and the State of Texas has engaged, and the spirit which has made the followers of the American and Texas flags the most outstanding examples of patriotism and heroism in the world.

Visiting notables who were present, and who were introduced, were: John D. Carter, president of the Texas Elks Association, Fort Worth; Rollie Pray, secretary of Texas Elks association, Fort Worth; W. T. Bridges, esteemed loyal knight, Fort Worth; Tom Valles, district deputy grand exalted ruler, Texas West, Breckenridge; Bill Huey, secretary Cisco lodge.

Cattle Shipments In State Show Substantial Rise

AUSTIN, Tex.—A substantial increase in live stock shipments occurred in Texas during April in comparison with both the preceding month and the corresponding month last year, the University of Texas Bureau of Business Research monthly livestock report showed.

"Shipments totaled 9,951 cars against 7,174 cars during April last year, an increase of 26 per cent," the report said. "Of the different classes of livestock, cattle shipments showed the greatest absolute gain. Forwardings of this class of animals were 7,134 cars compared with 5,739 during April last year, an increase of 24 per cent. Shipments of calves, 579 against 721, showed a decrease of 20 per cent. But shipments of hogs, 768 compared with 347 cars, and sheep, 370 compared with 367 cars, showed increases of 121 per cent and 55 per cent respectively over April last year."

"Forwardings of Texas livestock during the month of April always reflects an interesting seasonal movement—the shipment of Texas livestock to the Flint Hills of Kansas and the Osage Country of Oklahoma. This year almost 3,000 cars of Texas cattle were destined for the Flint Hills—almost 50 per cent more than during April last year. But the 1,220 cars shipped to the Osage country did not much exceed the 1,180 cars shipped to this region in April a year ago. Forwardings of sheep to the Kansas Flint Hills were more than double those of last year while considerably fewer sheep were shipped to the Oklahoma pastures. This situation obviously reflects superior pasture conditions in Kansas in comparison with Oklahoma this season, presumably the result of drouth in the latter state.

"Fort Worth maintained its strong position as a market for Texas livestock during the month. Some of the other large markets, however, showed some significant changes. For example, more than three times as many hogs were shipped to the Los Angeles market as were forwarded to this market in April last year. Chicago received more than 10,000 Texas sheep, East St. Louis nearly 7,000 St. Joseph and the State of Iowa 8,000 against practically none last year.

"Regions of the State showing the most marked increases of livestock movements were: cattle, from the northwest plains, the Trans Pecos Country, the Edwards plateau and south Texas; hogs, from the south high plains, and east Texas; sheep, from the Edwards plateau and north Texas.

"The large shipments of Texas livestock during the month, together with the maintenance of a favorable price level indicates the continuation of the growing income of the livestock raisers of the State."
