World Famous Grain Dealer Dies

By United Press
CHICAGO, June 24.—Arthur Cutten, grain trader whose personal fortune was estimated at one time as high as $100,000,000 died early today in his hotel.

Cutten had been ill since he was stricken with pneumonia seven months ago. He died at the age of 66.

Born in Canada he came to Chicago in 1890 to take a seven-dollar-a-week job. Six years later he invested his savings, $600 in a seat on the board of trade. He operated as a free lance. In 1911, it was said, he owned more wheat than any man in the world ever owned before.

The grain futures commission in 1934 charged him with failure to make proper daily reports and barred him from the nation's grain exchanges for two years.

Cutten appealed, won a reversal from the United States circuit court. The reversal was upheld later by the supreme court.

Back We Go To Ideas of Wilson and T. R.

The Republicans having sounded off manfully against monopoly and monopolists, President Roosevelt speaks to Texans in the same key; and it all sounds like a breath from the past—from 1912, say, when Woodrow Wilson and another Roosevelt were rousing the people to realize that democracy has economic as well as political implications.

You do not have to be so very old to remember the great anti-monopoly campaign of the pre-war years, nor do you have to be so very observant to discover that the campaign fell on evil times when the World War began.

A nation which cast nearly 10,500,000 votes for anti-monopolists Roosevelt and Wilson in 1912 was willing in 1920 to elect an administration to which monopoly was part of the natural order of things.

Andrew Mellon became secretary of the treasury and held the job longer than any other man before or since. Great oil combines got our petroleum reserves, and the country became indignant not because the combines got them, but because they paid bribes for them. Only the fact that George Norris was a great two-handed fighter kept Henry Ford from getting Muscle Shoals.

The Democratic party was able, with a straight face, to nominate a Morgan lawyer for the presidency in 1924. LaFollette crusaded as an anti-monopolist that year, sounded old-fashioned, and took a great beating. When Al Smith sought the presidency in 1928, his moderate efforts to curb monopoly were hailed as sure signs of socialism.

Those things were symptoms. We had got tired of the old crusade. The public generally was indifferent to the old battle cries. Business was good and seemed to be getting better. Nobody wanted to bite the hand that was feeding him.

And then, in 1929, somebody pulled the plug. In the hard years that followed we began to learn things.

We learned, for instance—what Wilson and T. R. had told us two decades before—that political freedom is less than half a loaf, unless it be accompanied by a decent measure of economic freedom. If a man's right to earn a living is at the mercy of remote forces which he can neither control nor properly identify, he is up against a thing which, as the Republican platform remarks, 'will utterly destroy constitutional government and the liberty of the citizen.'

So now we are back where we were 24 years ago; or, to be more exact, we are back in that frame of mind, but with a new knowledge and a new determination. Both candidates are pledged to carry on the fight of pre-war years. It is not without significance that Roosevelt is an old Wilsonian and Landon an old Bull Mooser.

Governor Hoffman says the United States "has cut paper dolls long enough." He's right; it has been months since the weird climax of the Hauptmann case.

"All little red schoolhouses haven't passed." So there's still a chance for the Communist party to enlist their brain trust.

A SMART FOURSOME

There's youth appeal and sport appeal in this powerful Hudson Eight convertible coupe with its power dome cylinder head motor and 124 horsepower. It's just the thing for a day at the golf links or for a cross-country trip. There's utility, too, for the top can be raised quickly and easily, transforming it into a closed car, with the same smart lines that mark it as an open car. Three can ride with comfort in the front seat, for the electric hand does away with the gear shift lever and the parking brake is located conveniently at the left, under the coil.
