CONTROVERSY IS HEARD ON SCHOOL LAWS

By United Press
AUSTIN, Nov. 10.—Opposite views on how a state school superintendent should be selected were before a senate committee, meeting today to consider school law changes.
State Superintendent L. A. Woods told the committee the superintendent should be elected. The campaign makes him familiar with conditions in all parts of the state, Woods said.
B. F. Tisfing of Garland, president of the state board of education, today told the committee the superintendent should be appointed. If he is elected he cannot face the conditions if he should be faced, he said.
Tisfing suggested the superintendent be appointed by the governor from a list of nominees submitted by the state board of education.
Tisfing said there is no need for greater school funds. The present income is adequate if efficiently administered, he said.

Excited over the prospect of staging the Turkey Trot without turkeys the city's business men went into a huddle and came out with an offer to rent the birds at 30 cents a head.

TRAIN CREW IS BEATEN BY IRATE WOMEN

By United Press
MINDEN, La., Nov. 10.—H. E. Cole, engineer, and C. H. Walters, fireman, strike breaking trainmen of the L. & A. railway were beaten with sticks last night by a score of women strike sympathizers.
Five hundred L. & A. trainmen have been on strike for two months demanding increased wages.
"They took the beating about as casually as it was given" Sheriff O. H. Haynes said. "I went down to the railroad yards and those fellows had been beaten, all right, but they didn't seem worried. They weren't badly hurt. They went back to work."
It was too dark for the trainmen to identify their assailants, the sheriff said.

Canning Plant for Valley Is Largest Operated In Texas

By United Press
McALLEN, Tex.—What is believed to be the largest vegetable and fruit canning plant in Texas, the $100,000 plant being completed by the Riona Products Company of McAllen, was expected to start operations early in November, according to announcement of Lee Akin, president of the concern.
Exterior work on the concrete brick and steel structure in complete and machinery for processing the first vegetables to go through the plant is being installed.
Four separate canning processes will be used in handling the various products, Akin stated. Vegetables, fruit juices, citrus juice concentrate and citrus by-products will be the four general classes into which the plant's products will be divided, and special machinery had been installed to handle each type.
Three of the newest type bean "snipers," machines which cut beans into the proper size for canning, have been installed at a cost of several thousand dollars. Beans will probably be the first of a large group of winter vegetables to be processed at the plant, and other vegetables will handle as the various harvest seasons arrive. Peas, spinach, kraut and tomatoes will probably follow.
Eight large cooking retorts have been installed in the basement, while machinery is located both in the basement, open to the third floor, and on the second floor. All vegetables are cooked in the pressure retorts after canning. Each step in processing fruits and vegetables progresses from the basement and first floor toward the warehouse and loading spaces in the west wing to facilitate production and handling, Akin explained.
One of the most unique machines in the new plant is the orange juice concentrator. Akin explained that the vacuum process is used in concentrating the juice at a temperature of about 110 degrees. One gallon of concentrate is equal to five gallons of ordinary juice. The concentrator will manufacture about 2,500 gallons of concentrate daily from 80 tons of fruit.
Even the citrus peel, used in small amounts in making candied citrus peel, will be utilized by the new plant, Akin said. The peel will be ground up and sold to feed mills for use in making feed for livestock. Molasses, oats and other edibles are added to the ground peel and make an excellent feed, Akin stated. It can also be used for fertilizer, it was explained.

Lest We Forget

Lest we forget, the red poppies in Flanders Field are again faded and gone. The first snow of another winter is drifting over the resting places of our boys who did not come back. As the signal is sounded tomorrow at exactly eleven o'clock, pause for a minute with the Gold Star Mothers whose anguish for their boys will never know an Armistice. Heroes, all of them. For them we will stand for one minute at respectful attention. For the safety of our homes they made the supreme sacrifice. We cannot all be heroes in a war of arms.
As we journey through this life, each of us is destined to have a part to play. Our field is at the shop, in our homes, in the school and on the street. Whether you be one of those who went across, or among those who nobly carried on at home, when your safety is my concern, and mine is yours, then and only then will an Armistice against the safety and well-being of our country be declared. Simple as the placing of a

PLANES DROP BOMBS TODAY UPON MADRID

By United Press
Five nationalist tri-motored planes bombed Madrid late today. One shell struck the roof of the parliament building.
It was believed ten bombs were dropped, causing some casualties. It was not possible to check, immediately, the number of dead and wounded.
The battle for Madrid raged dramatically, audible but invisible, in the dense woods of the Casa del Campo today.
The population after almost 24 hours of bombardment in which scores were killed and about 200 wounded, awaited the outcome.
On the southwestern, southern and eastern part of the city an ominous silence prevailed. The cannonading has ceased and the enemy apparently was reforming its lines for a final assault.
The silence was broken once during the morning by the roar of three bombs dropped by two rebel planes on the southern edge of the city.
Casa del Campo is on the west, opposite the center of the city.
Official quarters were more optimistic after seeing the militia and a new international column composed of French, German and Russian antifascists withstand enemy attacks.
Madrid accustomed itself to walking about dark streets or remaining indoors. Barricades were erected in outlying sections.
The new loyalists foreign legion gave promise of being of first rate importance. The men seemed to be army veterans. The most of them are Russians.

Criminal Cases Due On Monday

By United Press
LONDON, Nov. 10.—An unimpeachable neutral source today told the United Press in an uncorroborated telephone conversation from Madrid that he believed Madrid is doomed.
"There is no longer any hope. Fighting continues along the bank of the Manzanares river as I talk. Machine guns are firing furiously. There is heavy fighting on the edge of the city," he said.
The populace appears serenely awaiting the end.
"I don't know when the end will come, but if this keeps up it should come very soon."

Vice Presidency Should Be Made a Real Job.

Every four years the attention of the American people is jogged to a realization of the fact that their vice president leads a deplorable life.

He gets a workout during the campaign, and he usually makes the most of it—except in the case of Mr. Garner, who doesn't seem to like to make speeches. A vice president has to make the most of it, for it is the only chance he gets.

If his ticket is beaten, of course, he retires to private life, and there are no more rear platform talks in his program. And if he wins, his fate is even worse; for he retires then to the lofty and distinguished obscurity of the vice presidency, wherein his compatriots ignore him completely and eternally.

This has become a great joke, in recent years. That excellent musical show of a few years back, "Of Thee I Sing," got at least half of its fun from a long-drawn jibe at the vice president's plight.

Tom Marshall, vice president under Wilson, lived up to the part perfectly when he solemnly announced that what the country needed most was a good five-cent cigar. It was generally agreed that that was the kind of statement a vice president should issue.

But how absurd is all this! The vice president holds the second highest office in our gift. One life stands between him and the presidency. Logically, he should be selected with as much care as the president. And the job that he holds most certainly should be as big as the responsibility that goes with it.

As things stand, of course, the job is a washout. The vice president must be more or less a parliamentarian to preside over the Senate; he needs a stout digestive apparatus so that he may eat all the dinners offered to vice presidents.

Beyond that, he has nothing whatever to do. Small wonder that many good men seldom want the job, or that those who hold it are so promptly forgotten.

We have been luckier with our vice presidents than we deserve. The two who were advanced to the presidency in the century—Calvin Coolidge and Theodore Roosevelt—acquitted themselves very well indeed, and were triumphantly elected when their terms expired.

Our "weak" presidents in the 19th century were as a rule, men who were elected directly to the office and not who stepped into it from the vice presidency.

But we can't rely on that kind of luck forever. Sooner or later we are apt to find our little custom most horribly expensive. If and when we do, we doubtless shall wonder why we ever continued the custom so long.

It should not take too much rejiggering of our laws to make the vice presidency a real job—the sort of job a vice presidency is in a modern corporation, for instance.

If we did that, we would automatically make the selection of vice presidential candidates a real job, too. And our machinery of government, year in and year out, would be a lot sounder.

Troops Drive the "Leopard Men" Out of Liberia

By United Press
CAPE MOUNT, Liberia—Liberia's "Human Leopards," dreaded secret society of the African bush, have been scattered by soldiers sent by the Liberian government. Murders and attacks on human beings had been reported from the Grand Cape Mount District, and the militia at Monrovia were sent to the bush to disperse the attackers. The government at first was skeptical of reports that these occurrences were the work of "Human Leopards," but finally was forced to take action when several paramount chiefs went to the capital and demanded help. On arrival of the militia and government officials in the district the "leopards" fled to the jungles of the interior, taking with them two small children as their final toll of human life.

"Carl Nelson. Your fan. Your public. He sat next to me when you sang and yelled into my ear to ask who you were. I gave him your address, but I thought he'd only write a letter—"

Downstairs Althy was admitting the caller. They could hear her politely asking him to "rest" his hat on the table and sit down.

"Spruce up!" Kate said to Caroline. "He'll expect you to look pretty. I'll help you dress. Yes, Althy! She'll be right down!"

A quick change of clothing, fragrant powder, a comb run through her already smooth and shining, and Caroline was ready.

Kate, sitting beside her sleeping grandfather and mechanically fanning him, heard the murmur of voices below. Two hours of it. Then the man took his departure and Caroline came running upstairs and into the room, starry-eyed.

"Guess what?" she said in an ecstatic whisper. "He's from a Louisville radio station! I'm to have an audition!"

Kate arose and they did a dance together in jubilation. They had indulged in this insanity since earliest childhood, whenever joy overtook them. They danced out of the room now down the narrow hallway and into their own room, where they fell into chairs and stared at one another with "light."

"Tell all!" Kate implored dramatically. "Isn't he attractive?" Caroline said. "He's not married."

Kate was impatient. "I'm not interested in Mr. Nelson's private life. What about your chances? Go on. Talk!"

"Yes. . . Well, his radio station has a sponsor who's looking for a program. They want someone to sing for half an hour every week day from 7 to 7:30. They had in mind simple ballads. That sort of thing. Mr. Nelson's been scouting for someone. When he heard me, he thought I'd do. I'm to have an audition in the morning at the studio. At 10:30. Oh, Kate can this be?"

"Better. I didn't tell him why you went to Louisville. Well?"

"They've accepted me, Kate. Here's my contract." They walked to the porch and sat on the steps and wept in each other's arms.

"Seventy dollars a week!" Caroline announced incredulously. "Oh, Caroline! For doing something you love to do!"

"Oh, Caroline! For doing something you love to do!"

"Oh, Caroline! For doing something you love to do!"

"Oh, Caroline! For doing something you love to do!"

"Oh, Caroline! For doing something you love to do!"

"I've planned it all out, Kate. I'm going to do my final year at the University and get my degree. I'll take two voice lessons a week. I'll live as cheaply as possible and send home all I can spare—"

They laughed and wept again, until Althy came out and stared at them, hands on hips, and asked excitedly, "What de trouble now? Is de sky fell?"

CAROLINE'S work was to start at once, so a telegram informed her, and the first broadcast would take place the following Monday.

Sheby took its new celebrity to its heart and there followed for Caroline four or five days of pleasant attentions rendered by her surprised townpeople.

Kate said with a slightly malicious delight, "Nobody expected a Meed to be heard from, Caroline! They've looked on us as extinct."

Major Meed had to be told, since Caroline must leave home, but all details were kept from him. It would be best for him not to know the particulars, they felt, inasmuch as he might suffer sympathetically from "mike fright" and render himself ill again.

In the days that followed Jeff Howard continued to bring ice and to inquire after the sick man.

Through Althy he sent "congratulations to Miss Caroline." That was all. He never encountered Kate during his brief visits and he had no way of knowing whether this was accidental or studied avoidance on her part. He only knew that his heart pounded suffocatingly when he approached the ugly little house that sheltered her; that when he had driven away a great loneliness settled around his life like a fog obscuring whatever it was that made life worth living.

Kate had decided not to tune in for Caroline's first broadcast. Yet, as Monday afternoon wore away, she felt more and more impelled to listen. At 6:50 she was fingering the dials excitedly, only to hear a garbled blur of sound that left her despairing. The set which they used—an ancient, un dependable affair at best—operated from batteries, and these, evidently, were sadly in need of being charged.

Kate suddenly felt that she must hear Caroline's first broadcast or she could not stand it. Caroline would be in the studio now, composing herself, looking over her notes. In 10 minutes she would be on the air.

The thought was too much for Kate. She ran from the house, jumped into the sedan that stood in the driveway and drove like mad toward Meed Meadows as unerringly as a bird winging its way home.

GRIDIRON HEROES

THERE was no stopping Beattie Feather when that rampaging lad with Indian blood in his veins roamed the gridiron for Tennessee in 1933. Beattie probably was the greatest all-around back ever produced in Dixie—and that's saying a lot. He was a great punter, could pass with the best, and had few equals at logging the leather. His record of gaining 1062 yards in 10 games in 1933, averaging 9.5 each time he carried the ball, brought him the honor of being the most valuable player in the Southeastern Conference that year. He won eight varsity awards in basketball, track, and football. At present he is one of the best players in professional football, starring with the Chicago Bears.

wreath! Honorable as the memory of our boys over there! What of our records when they, too, are written on the sands of time? Taps will be sounding and the echo will whisper, lest we forget! Lest we forget!

Thus should we all be respectfully and reverently reminded of that momentous occasion eighteen years ago when the last gun was fired on the Western Front. At exactly eleven o'clock tomorrow morning, a cannon will be fired, and, as its echo fades, twenty buglers will blow taps on the streets of Ranger as veterans and their friends face "West" for a period of sixty seconds of silent prayer.
