American Parlor Fun Still Holds Its Lure

George S. Parker, who has been inventing and marketing parlor games since 'way' back in the pre-lotto era, emerges from the wreck of the election land slide to remark that the ancient and genteel sport of playing games around the living room table is going just as strong as it ever was.

The sport seems to have begun, according to Mr. Parker, back in 1843, or thereabouts, when someone brought out a game called "Mansions of Happiness."

This game swept the country, and then gave way to a variety of successors; and, somehow, to hear Mr. Parker call the roll on these succeeding games is to get a picture of a homely, "comfy" side of American life that goes on, uninterrupted, through wars and depressions and complaints about the decline of the American home.

After "Mansions of Happiness"—and wouldn't you like to know what that game was, and how it was played?—there came such old favorites as crokinole and caroms, in which you snapped little doughnut-shaped pieces of wood around a polished board and made your fingers sore.

And then, around 1890, someone brought out tiddler-winks, and sober citizens spent hours trying to snap one bone disc into a glass cup with another bone disc.

Do you remember flinch—that card game played with an amazingly thick deck of cards numbered from one to fifteen? And bamboozle, a weird variant of it? And rook, and pit—which used to cause much loud yelling and squeals of excited laughter—and that darkly intellectual card game, authors? And that strangest of all card games, lost heir?

Someone could write a monograph on those card games. They flourished at a time when large numbers of staid citizens felt that ordinary playing cards were inventions of the devil and sure passports to the land of eternal fire.

But they liked to play cards, just the same; so these other card games were brought out, to take the curse off an enjoyable pastime.

Lost heir if you can remember it, was nothing in the world but ancient game of 509, played with a special deck.

Then we come down to modern times, with mah jongg and the revival of backgammon—and, more recently, with monopoly. All these, like their predecessors, remarks Mr. Parker, held a peak of popularity for about two years and then faded—except that monopoly is still going strong.

And what about it all? Well, Mr. Parker says that while games come and go, the habit of playing them goes on undiminished. It is about as strong in summer as in winter and it doesn't change much from one generation to another.

To divert us, we have autos, movies, radios, and a lot of other things which our grandfathers did not have. But grouping about the living-room table in an eager family circle, is a diversion that never loses its appeal.

When scientists begin to make food out of wood, a profitable concession would be the hot log stands.

THIS CURIOUS WORLD By William Ferguson

AT THE PRESENT DEMAND, AMERICA'S COAL SUPPLY, IT IS ESTIMATED, WILL LAST ABOUT 2,000 YEARS.

LABRADOR, THE FIRST PART OF AMERICA TO BE DISCOVERED BY EUROPEANS, IS THE LAST PORTION OF THE CONTINENT IN WHICH LARGE AREAS REMAIN UNEXPLORED BY WHITE MEN.

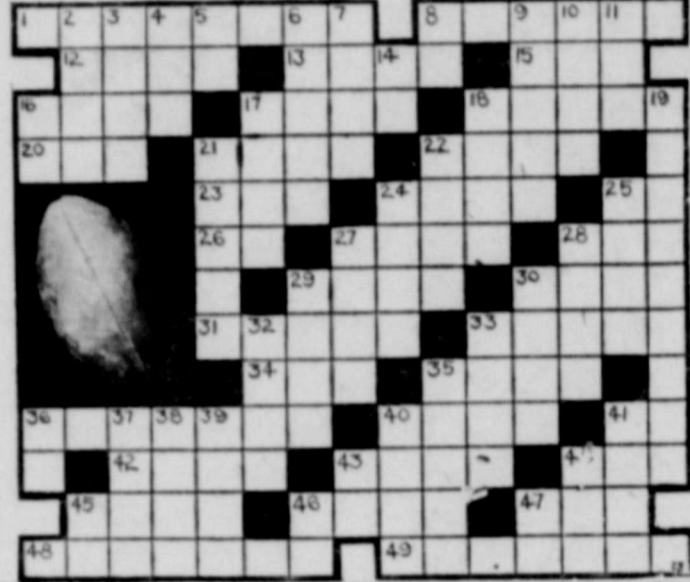

JOHN AND MIKE SPANI, LOGAN, WEST VA., RECEIVED A LETTER FROM THEIR MOTHER, IN GREECE, AND NO POSTAGE HAD BEEN PAID ON THE LETTER, AND THE ENVELOPE BORE NO CANCELLATION MARKS.

The recent Third World Power Conference gave reasons why coal conservation should be considered an urgent problem. Although the United States may have enough to last about two thousand years, the probable increased demand is likely to cut this time down to a few hundred years.

GRIDIRON HEROES

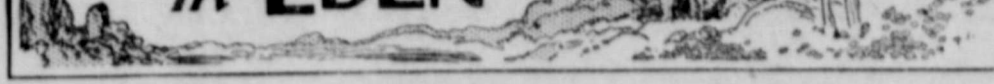

The Fighting Irish of Notre Dame have filled football's annals with stirring deeds. George Gipp! Knute Rockne! Gus Dorais! Frank Cardona! Johnny O'Brien! But one of the Ramblers who starred under difficulties, and who now holds the highest position in Irish football, is Eimer Layden, current Notre Dame coach, who, as a 160-pound fullback, probably was the greatest performer in that position at that weight in the history of the game.

HALF-ACRE in EDEN

BEGIN HERE TODAY MARCIA CANFIELD, daughter of wealthy PHILIP CANFIELD, knows that the neighborhood is buzzing with gossip over the sudden disappearance of FRANK KENDRICK, whose engagement to Marcia has been announced. Since the disappearance, a shortage in Kendrick's business accounts has been discovered.

Helen said, "Do you mind if I speak freely? It's something I've got to tell you."

ON the morning after the Edgecraft Guild tryouts and the Dog Wagon ho'dup, Marcia breakfasted as usual with her father. Both of these survivors of the Canfield line were healthy enough to be good-humored of mornings, and therefore talkative, but it was seldom that they had as much fuel for conversation as now.

Mr. Canfield, as a practical person, could offer Marcia little solace in the loss of her mother's ring. It was probable, he pointed out, that the bandits would discard the worn setting and dispose of the ruby by methods which left little hope of recovery.

"I'll ride down to the train with you," said Marcia, "and stop in at the police station afterward. Maybe, by some good chance, they'll have news for me."

Her father cast about for a pleasant topic. "And what luck did you have at the tryout for the show?" he asked. "You didn't mention it when you came in and sat on the edge of my bed last night to tell me about the ho'dup, and you had me so excited that I forgot to ask."

"My word!" said Marcia. "You haven't been told the chief theatrical news of the day. I got the leading part, Dad!"

"Very fine, indeed," said her father. "Doubtless I am supposed to say 'tickets'."

MARCIA stepped out and walked over to the Waddells' car.

and rush—and crime problem, I not just as characters in the play." "They watched the train depart. "But I must see you for a bit of a talk," said Helen, so suddenly and earnestly that Marcia was surprised.

"Why, certainly, Helen! Let's see—I want to call at the police station, and I ought to pick up my copy of the play script and get to work on my part. Why not come along and get yours? Then we can go back to my house and start our reading."

"It's an idea," said Helen. "Though calling at the police station can't do me much good. My only loss was a $5 bill. Try to name something harder to identify. I'm terribly sorry about your ring, Marcia. That was a real misfortune. . . . But send your chauffeur to the house and come along with me. I'd have to park my car at home anyway before going along in yours."

MARCIA dismissed the chauffeur and climbed in beside Helen. They stopped at the police station, but there was no news of the bandits.

"Well," said Helen as they entered the car again, "that has to be that for the present. Before going after the copies of the play, let's run up to my house for another spot of coffee, and I'll see whether I can do any errands for Mother while we're out. By the way, where do we go for the scripts?"

"Mrs. Reid Henderson has them. She's going to direct, you know."

"Yes. Apropos nothing, but just to promote a spirit of girlish confidence, I'm glad it's to be Mrs. Reid Henderson instead of her sister-in-law, Harold Henderson's wife. And that prompts the further observation that it struck me last night that, on the whole, the cast they've chosen ought to get along pretty well together. Don't you think so? As people, I mean;

"Yes," said Marcia, pondering an exception. "Yes, indeed."

"With exceptions, no doubt," continued Helen, "if you don't mind my reading your thoughts, which agree so thoroughly with my own."

"I admit that you've read my thoughts."

"They arrived at the Waddells' home and settled before the fire in the living room to await coffee before Helen resumed the conversation.

"Mind if I speak out freely, man to man? Something I've got to tell you anyway."

"I don't mind at all," said Marcia.

"It's an item of information. I could hardly decide whether to tell you. But I've known you long enough and well enough to prefer to tell you myself—risking your reception of it—than to take a chance on its getting loose and reaching you later in a garbled version. From someone, let's say, like Dorothy Osborn, who advertised her depth of sweet nature so well with her stage whisper remark at the Guild tryouts last night."

Red Cross Gave Disaster Relief In 39 States

The American Red Cross was called on for assistance to 131,000 families as a result of disasters in 39 states during the past year. On 105 occasions the Red Cross was called upon during the year to render aid in stricken communities. This involved assistance as a result of floods, shipwrecks, earthquakes, fires, tornadoes, hurricanes, typhoons, forest fires, epidemics, explosions, bombings, landslides and other types of disasters.

Maternity and infant care was given by our nurses on islands off our coast, in isolated mountain communities, and in drought-stricken areas.

Red Cross public health nurses gave care to 233,616 persons and made 1,069,061 visits to or on behalf of the sick. In their school and pre-school work the nurses cooperated with doctors in examining 671,057 children. Of this number they found 342,861 with physical defects and arranged for curative treatment in 209,080 cases. Through courses in the care of the sick and home sanitation, 53,126 persons, including men and women, girls and boys, were awarded certificates upon completing the course prescribed and taught by the Red Cross.

Juvenile Officer Sees Lighter Work

By United Press

FORT WORTH, Tex.—At least one Fort Worth citizen has a real reason to be happy in winter—because his work is reduced by three-quarters.

That's what county Juvenile Officer C. E. Baker said cold weather does for him. Boys and girls don't get in trouble as much before Christmas—and freezing temperatures aren't conducive to mischief.

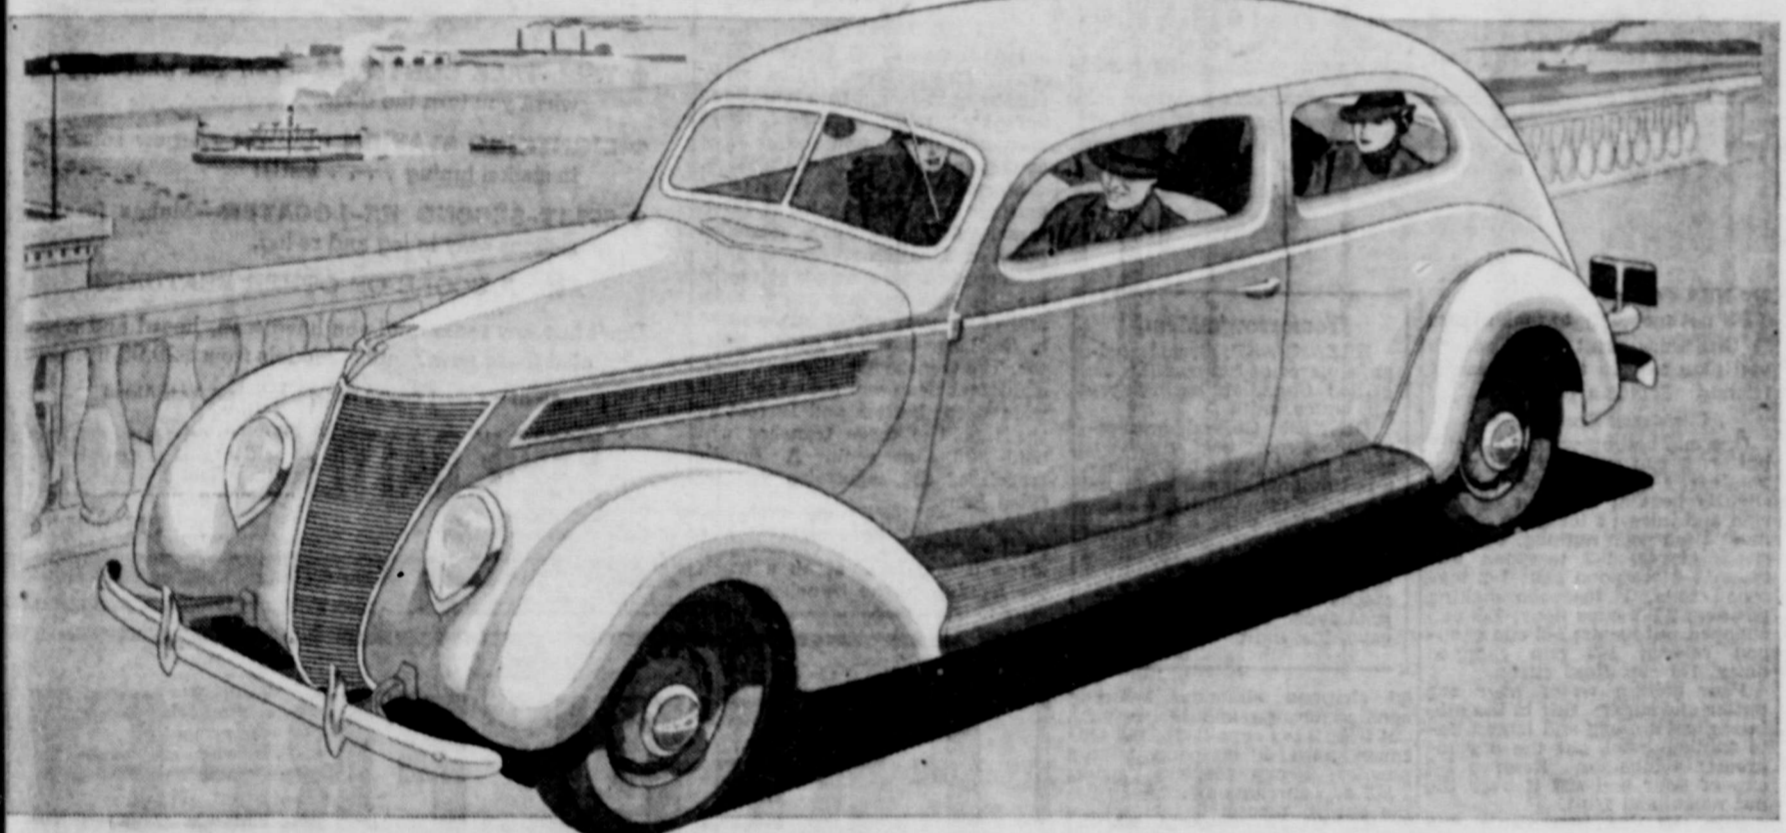

Juvenile delinquency here is about one-fourth as great in winter as in summer, Carter said.

Except for a little vigilance, it was practically no trick at all for a local trailer home owner to keep alongside his garbage can on Halloween.

Rate Reductions Sought by Shippers In Rio Grande Valley

By United Press MISSION, Tex.—One of the most-sought railway rate reductions ever asked by Lower Rio Grande Valley citrus and vegetable shippers—a rate to the Atlantic seaboard which would permit a semblance of competition to Florida citrus shipments—will become effective on Nov. 15. This information was announced by Ted M. Melden, president of the Texas Citrus Shippers' Association and sales manager of the Texas Citrus Fruit Growers' Exchange of Mission.

Melden stated that the new rail rates to Atlantic seaboard destinations and to eastern railways east of the Mississippi River would save many thousands of dollars. The rates were set after efforts of the shippers' association had been exerted for several months.

The eastern seaboard rate had been reduced from $1.30 for 100 pounds to $1.10 per 100 pounds on all fruit originating in the Valley and destined for eastern markets.
