OLDEN HORNETS LOSE BIG GAME TO MORAN TEAM

Moran Bulldogs, 12 to 0 winner over Olden Hornets in the district 11-B championship game at Eastland Friday afternoon, will meet Nocona of district 12 at Olney next Friday.

The arrangement was made following the Bulldogs' victory on the Eastland field. Olden was the winner in one division of the class B district and Moran in the other.

Coach O. E. Patterson's team, apparently heavier than Scroggs' Hornets, went for their first touchdown early in the first quarter.

Hyatt's kick was returned by Snyder, Moran passer and runner, who ran a short distance, accounted for the first marker. Weber attempted to kick for an extra point, but failed when his boot wasn't true.

Another pass, Snyder to Wiloth, accounted for the second touchdown early in the second quarter. The winning aerial was one of a series by Snyder from the Olden 30-yard stripe. A pass from Snyder to a teammate failed to connect for the extra point.

Moran on several later occasions threatened seriously, but the failure of Bulldogs to receive Snyder's pass over and near the goal line prevented any of the drives in materializing.

Snyder was the outstanding player for Moran.

Joe and Wilbur Norton, Curry, Hyatt and Anderson were stars in the defense for Olden. The Hornets were able to cope with Moran's ground plays but the aerials had them stopped.

Those who follow class A football marveled at the dispatch of Olden and Moran in playing the game. There was only one injury, Curry, in the game. Few time outs were taken and penalties were negligible.

Moran amassed 10 first downs and Olden three.

Johnnie Kitchen of Eastland was referee. Perryman was umpire and Wallace head lineman.

Scout Knowledge Saves Son's Life

Knowledge of artificial respiration which he has imparted to Eastland youths was credited Saturday by Scoutmaster G. W. Jackson as responsible for saving the life of his three and one-half year-old son.

Jerry, Jackson's son, fell Friday into a fish pond in Dug Bagley's yard, a neighbor of the family. Screams called attention of Jackson to his son's plight in the pond, estimated at two and one-half feet in depth.

He took his son out, and after using a respiration method for less than two minutes decided he was all right.

"Today young Jackson has only a bad cold to remind him of the fall.

SOBER REFLECTION

"I guess I deserved what I got," 17-year-old James Sullivan reflects as, shackled to a detective who shared his seat with him, he made the all-too-brief journey from New York to Sing Sing prison's death house. "If only I hadn't..." If only he hadn't killed Abraham Myerson in a $9 robbery he might have been playing in the snow instead of facing electrocution on January 7.

LOYALISTS TO RETAIN MADRID LEADER SAYS

By United Press
MADRID, Nov. 28—Gen. Emilio Kieber, mystery man of the civil war, asserted today the nationalists had lost their fight for Madrid and if they entered the city they could not hold it.

His men already disposed for an expected supreme attack by the nationalists, Kieber said he did not believe the nationalists could get into the city at all, unless Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini sent German and Italian troops to aid them.

MURDER ADDS TO MYSTERY OF MISSING MEN

By United Press
SAN PERLITA, Nov. 28—The killing of a Mexican hunting guide, Fernando Ramirez, 50, stirred new excitement here today as Texas Rangers continued their search for Luther Blanton and his son, John, who disappeared more than a week ago.

The officers were unable to connect the two cases immediately, but were investigating the possibility that Ramirez knew something of the disappearance of Blanton and his son.

Five Mexicans, four men and a woman, were arrested for questioning.

Justice of the Peace Frank Wilson held an inquest hearing and heard the testimony of Dr. C. C. Conley that Ramirez had been dead since four o'clock this morning.

Ramirez had been shot and stabbed. His body was found near his automobile, lying in a field several miles south of Raymondville.

The Blantons disappeared more than a week ago, after leaving their farm home to hunt in the forbidden game preserve of the 1,000,000-acre King Ranch.

Ramirez served as a hunting guide for deer hunters on a 500-acre tract owned by a Harlingen business man.

Cowboy of Old West Sheds Tear Over Headstones on "Boot Hill," Recalls Famous Texas Gunmen

By United Press
TASCOSA, Tex.—John Lang came back to old Tascosa, for a last look at a time faded page of the Old West's history, then he departed for his home in Haines, Ore., to spend his last days.

Tears streamed down his face as he walked among the dusty headstones on "Boot Hill" that mark the graves of his friends, killed the night of March 21, 1885, in a feud between cattle trail drivers.

That fight is remembered as one of the bloodiest in range history of the Texas plains.

Lang, then a cowboy, in subsequent years joined the Alaskan gold rush, served in the army in the Philippines during the Spanish-American War, and later, was a member of the Oregon legislature.

He came back to Texas to visit the Texas Centennial Exposition, and was drawn by a vivid remembrance of his stirring youth to visit old Tascosa, now deserted save by Mrs. Mickey McCormick, whose husband lies buried in Cam Romero Cemetery nearby.

Luck Churns Fate

Lang told of leaving a cattle camp at Jerry Springs, that March afternoon in 1885, with three companions, to ride to Tascosa for a "spree." Frank Valley drew his six-shooter, killed a rabbit and cut off the left hind foot to keep for a luck charm.

"They visited Jim East's Equity bar-Ed King, Lon Woodruff, Charley Emory and Lang emerged from the saloon and started across a street to Jess Jenkins' saloon.

A volley out in the darkness, King fell dead. Successive blasts felled Woodruff and Emory. A rifle shot ripped Lang's coat sleeve.

Lang said he dodged into East's saloon and begged the bartender, Concho, to lend him a loaded revolver, Concho refused.

Frank Valley and Fred Chilton,

LONDON, Nov. 28—Six British parliament members, in a telegram to the government from Madrid, asserted today that portions of Madrid had been partly destroyed or made uninhabitable by nationalist bombs and shells.

The members appealed for "the immediate large scale action by neutral powers, working through an international organization, to aid the city."

MADRID, Nov. 28—A loyalist army of miners and militiamen, on a determined offensive, is fighting the bloodiest battle of the entire civil war against nationalists in Asturias, Spain's "bloody province," dispatches said today.

Airplanes are fighting airplanes, tanks are fighting tanks, and the men in the lines are fighting hand-to-hand without quarter, it was said.

It apparently is the biggest loyalist offensive of the war.

Loyalists claimed gains in the first phase of the fighting. The main objective is to capture Oviedo and to kill Gen. Miguel Aranda, nationalist commander on that front, and the most hated man in all Spain.

A Truly Great Woman Has Passed Away

What you do may be fine, important, spectacular. But what you are, in the long run, has a way of speaking more loudly. Your character has the last word, every time.

That is why so many people in this country felt a real, personal sorrow at the news that Ernestine Schumann-Heink was dead.

She had been a great singer—but we have had many great singers, whose passing did not make us feel that the world had lost a precious personality. Above and beyond her vocal talent, Madame Schumann-Heink was a great woman. She would have been a great woman without her ability to sing.

For here was a woman who had traveled the wide range of human experience to the full, knowing all that it could bring to her of sorrow and of triumph, and who had somehow managed to preserve that fundamental innocence, that eager lightness of heart, that is ageless and timeless—that quality which, according to our Gospels, is of the essence of the Kingdom of Heaven.

As a young woman, struggling to rise in that toughest of competition, the grand opera stage, she took all the bumps any aspiring musician can take.

She knew poverty, dire discouragement, caustic rebuffs. She was even turned down for a role, once, on the ground that she was not pretty enough—and grand opera's standards of feminine charm, Heaven knows, are exceedingly elastic.

All this she took without becoming embittered or cynical. She won success, at last, became world-famous, acquired riches—a good part of which she promptly spent on friends and relatives, for she had, as they say, a heart as big as all outdoors. And success was no more able to spoil her than was bad fortune.

And then came the war. She had a son in the kaiser's army; he was killed in action. She had another son in the American army, fighting the kaiser's army; he, too, was killed in action. The agony of grief, doubt, and divided loyalty that this must have caused her was never visible.

She toured the American training camps, sang for the soldiers over and over again with that rich, golden contralto of hers, and became a shining example of the selfless patriotism of which an American of foreign birth can be capable.

Now there is a good deal more in all this than the story of a person of genius bringing that genius of flower. It is the story of a human being licking fate to a frazzle; of a person who met all of life's varied experiences and emerged unspoiled, unstained, triumphant in the only way that human triumph has meaning.

We can forget Schumann-Heink the singer. Schumann-Heink the person will be an inspiration as long as we live.

California expects its best hunting season in years for doves, the peace birds. This is due to the big migration from Italy.

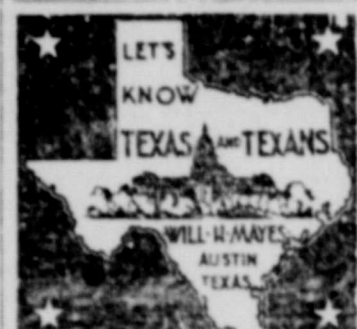

A peasant in Europe was operated on for removal of a pork he swallowed a year ago—and was not arrested for hoarding metals.

Q. Why did Texans claim Santa Fe as a part of the Republic? C. F.

A. Under the Velasco treaty with Santa Anna, the Mexican dictator agreed to withdraw his troops beyond the Rio Grande and concede the country to Texas. Texas claimed this territory as the territory to the head of the Rio Grande and that Santa Fe, being east of the Rio Grande, thereby became part of Texas.

Q. Did De Soto reach Texas on the expedition that terminated in his death on the Mississippi in the winter of 1541-42? F. K.

A. He reached eastern Kansas in the fall of 1541 and returned to the Mississippi to camp for the winter. Following his death there, Moscoso, his successor, led the explorers across the Red River near Texarkana and southwest to the Fraze in 1542, going from there west for some distance, pretty much along the Coronado route, before returning to the Mississippi.

from where they went by water to Mexico.

Q. What prompted further expeditions from Mexico following that of Coronado? T. L. K.

A. Following discovery of mines in Durango and Zacatecas, about 1580, Spanish slave hunters went to the Rio Grande to capture Indians to work the mines, where they heard again of fabulous wealth in cities to the northwest, which resulted in further expeditions to the New Mexico country.

Q. When and by whom was the Beaumont or Spindletop oil field brought in? B. C. B.

A. January 10, 1901, by Capt. Anthony F. Lucas. The location was about four miles south of Beaumont, for nine days the well ran wild at 75,000 to 100,000 barrels daily, creating wild excitement and speculation throughout the Nation.

BEGIN HERE TODAY
MARCIA CANFIELD, daughter of wealthy PHILIP CANFIELD, knows the neighborhood in business over the sudden disappearance of FRANK KENDRICK, whose engagement to Marcia has been announced. Since his disappearance, a shortage in Kendrick's funds has been discovered. With her friends, HELEN WADSWORTH, HELEN WADSWORTH, HELEN WADSWORTH, and others, Marcia is in a restaurant when there is a hold-up. Marcia loses a ring that was her mother's.

Learning Frank is in Chicago, Marcia goes there to try to persuade him to return and face his financial obligations. Before she reaches him, Frank disappears again.

In Chicago, she encounters BRUCE MEDGALL, a stranger, who volunteers a slight service. Bruce is also a passenger on the plane Marcia takes to return home. A few weeks later she sees him again. Bruce, an artist, has decided to make his home in the suburb.

Meanwhile, TONY STELLICCI, restaurant chef, suspecting his brother, CARLO, of being involved in the holdup and finds some of the lost in Carlo's home. Carlo and his confederates make plans to rob the bank.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XV
TONY STELLICCI, with a sick heart, realized that he had bungled the job which clearly had faced him when he first suspected Carlo's complicity in the Dog Wagon holdup. His immediate concern had been to recapture, as a matter of honor, the property stolen before his eyes from the restaurant customers. In his efforts to this end, and subsequently, he had acted in secret because of consideration of his father, fearing the effect of the shock upon the invalid should he learn that his other son was a thief. Having regained and mailed anonymously to the police his brother's share of the things stolen at the Dog Wagon, Tony had felt himself balked; he did not know how to proceed without publicity harmful to his father.

But as the same four men who had robbed his customers and since committed other holdups in Bobbs Neck—the Henderson bridge party and the Canfield home—Tony realized the effects of his failure. Somehow he should have stopped Carlo at the outset.

On the day after Carlo's visit to New York, Tony awakened, as usual, soon after noon and, greeting his father, prepared for his breakfast, seated by the landlady along with his father's lunch. The village welfare nurse was to call this afternoon on a regular visit, and after their meal Tony opened a book to read to his father until her arrival.

SINCE Marcia Canfield, as part of her contribution to the welfare work, frequently accompanied the nurse on her rounds, Tony was not surprised when the two arrived together this afternoon.

Nor, of course, was he surprised when Marcia, while the nurse efficiently began her tasks, told him of the mysterious recovery of her ring, the ruby ring that had belonged to her mother, taken by the Dog Wagon bandits and returned to her that morning by the police. The nurse requested Marcia's assistance. Tony wandered miserably out of the room and down stairs, where he stood in solemn thought at the front door.

The move was providential, for at that moment Carlo's car stopped in front of the house and his brother got out and strode up the walk.

The time had come for a showdown.

Providence granted one further boon. Tony's landlady appeared in the hall, dressed for the street, and announced that she was going out for an hour. She opened the door and, ignoring Carlo, whom she detested, walked away. The problem of private quarters for the interview with Carlo thus was solved.

"Come into the kitchen," Tony said curtly to his brother, and led the way.

CARLO saved him from the embarrassment of any evasive opening remarks.

"You know what I'm here for!" he said flatly. "You're the guy who busted into my house and swiped some stuff I had in the trunk."

Tony realized he had been expecting this; sooner or later Carlo had been sure to guess the identity of his visitor.

"I know what you're here for. What are you going to do about it?" he replied belligerently.

"Well, for— Listen here, you can't get away with robbing me, even if you are my brother! What kind of a dope do you take me for? I want that stuff back and I want it quick."

"The police got it this morning, but they don't know how," said Tony. "And they've given it back to the owners by now."

"Are you crazy? That stuff is my property."

"How do you figure it's yours?"

"I bought it, wise guy; that's how!"

For a moment a futile hope rose in Tony; could Carlo actually, absurdly, be guiltless? But the hope died quickly; there could be no mistake.

"Don't lie any more about it," said Tony. "You're not putting anything over on me. I saw the pliers one of your mob used to clip the phone when they robbed the restaurant. They were your pliers. I found lots of my tools. Follows all the time borrow them; half of 'em are out now. It's only your story you saw them, and even if you did see them, what's it got to do with me?"

"What's the use of stalling, Carlo? I've got it figured out right. You can't talk me out of it. You're in the gang that's been pulling all the robberies, and I'm telling you to get out of it or I'll turn you in to the cops."

"You're robbing my customers, my neighbors—people who live in the same town I live in, where I've been working a decent job and taking care of the old man, and where I don't intend to let a punk like you ruin things for me or for Dad. If he wasn't a sick man I'd have let you have this sooner. I didn't want to take any chances on his hearing about it; it'd probably kill him."

"But I'm telling you now—quit that racket, get out of that gang! Or believe me I'll turn you in, and I'll manage some way of keeping the old man ignorant of it if I have to move him across the country and find another job."

CARLO stood his ground. The youngster had nothing on him, only a suspicion.

"Why, you're crazy, Tony!" he said, trying to sound reasonable. "You wandered in and helped yourself to what you found in my house, and now this is something you've dreamed up to gyp me out of it. Well, you can't get away with it."

"I'm not stalling," said Tony. "Why don't you go down to the police and call my bluff if you think it's a bluff? Or how about my helping you call my bluff right here? There's a girl upstairs now, helping the nurse with the old man, who's wearing a ring I found in your house—the cops gave it back to her this morning."

Carlo, in futile rage and sudden fear, glared across the kitchen. Tony faced him with no less anger. And neither was conscious of a figure in the doorway until Marcia entered the room and, carefully closing the door behind her, faced them both.

"So that's how I got my ring back?" she said. "Your brother, isn't it, Tony?"

Tony nodded, aching with his shame and despair.

"Please, Miss Canfield," he said, "remember the old man upstairs."

"I know, Tony," she said. "We mustn't let him know about it. Here—the nurse sent me after hot water. Take it up to her. We'll wait here."

Tony filled the kettle and went out of the room. Marcia and Carlo heard his feet going up the stairs. They heard the dripping of a faucet, the ticking of the kitchen clock.

And Carlo's eyes were on the ring which could convict him.

(To Be Continued)

Meanwhile, TONY STELLICCI, restaurant chef, suspecting his brother, CARLO, of being involved in the holdup and finds some of the lost in Carlo's home. Carlo and his confederates make plans to rob the bank.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XVI
BOTH Marcia Canfield and Carlo Stellicci, waiting in the shabby kitchen while Tony carried hot water to the nurse attending his father upstairs, knew fear in those silent minutes.

Carlo's was the fear of guilt. Marcia's, the fear that came with sudden realization that an armed and cornered man faced her. There was a fascination in the thought; she looked at him curiously.

The man did not meet her gaze. Lighting a cigaret, he turned and stared out the window, trying to force his slow mind over possible escapes.

Yet all mental maneuvering was in vain; he knew that he was encouraging a futile hope. It flickered and died even as he tried to force it into reality.

"What are you going to do?" he asked, with a ghastly show of sudden penitence as he sought another avenue.

Marcia considered him, considered the sick man upstairs and his other son. She thought of the robbery of the Dog Wagon when this man, it was now clear, had somehow assisted the actual bandits, and of the loss of her mother's ring, by odd chance returned. She thought of the stripping of her own home on Christmas afternoon, and of the audacious afternoon of the benefit bridge party at which a hundred women of the town had lost all the jewelry they wore.

"What can we do," she demanded, "but tell the police? You have been robbing the town right and left! You all carry guns; it's a wonder you haven't murdered someone. The trouble is not what to do with you; it's how to protect your father and brother."

Carlo lighted a cigaret, but the pause brought him no help. Then an idea occurred to him.

"I wouldn't be the first guy who made a mistake," he said slowly, his face peculiarly ugly with his thought. "But you didn't put the cops on. Don't you think I know about Kendrick? Don't you think everybody in town is wise by now to what he did? He stole everything he could lay his hands on and then he beat it, but you never called the cops for him!"

Marcia stiffened at the impertinence, and then, as suddenly, she wanted to laugh, hysterically.

But she sobered immediately, angrily, and Carlo as quickly regretted his tactics.

"Look here," he pleaded. "I've got a wife. I've got the old man and Tony. Think of them, not me. I've made my mistakes, yes, but I'm no crook. I just got mixed up with the wrong people."

Marcia had no answer, but the door opened for Tony at the moment. He had put on his overcoat. Buttoning it and pulling gloves from his pocket, he looked at his brother.

"You'd better come along and get this over with," he said at last.

"Come along—where?" asked Carlo, forcing his voice to be hard.

"To the police who the rest of the gang are."

"You can't do that!" cried Carlo shrilly.

"I can't do anything else," Tony retorted. "I'm not feeling sorry for you. I'm feeling sorry for myself. I'm worrying about keeping it from the old man."

"Then think of him—!"

"I am thinking of him! You've given me that to worry about! If I could let you off I'd do it, for his sake. But if I let you off, I'd be letting your whole gang off. I'm a citizen here. If that means anything to you, I've got to turn you in and your gang with you. And then I've got the job of keeping the old man ignorant."

Marcia was aghast at the drama being enacted before her. Brother and brother! She longed for an easier solution than the stern one which Tony's logical mind, with what suffering she did not know, had fixed upon, but she knew there could be no other.

The thief's forgotten cigaret burned his fingers. He turned to the sink and stamped out the glowing end. Through the window he saw the world—a wide, free world.

"I could warn them off," he promised. "If I told them things for a divorce on the grounds her husband allegedly refused to take her to a movie unless she paid her own way.

Auto Industry Is Paying Less For Steel Used

Steel has been growing steadily more prominent in modern automobiles. The average increase in the use of steel per car in the 1937 models is estimated at 65 pounds compared with only 45 pounds in 1936. The steel used for a 1,000,000 car output next year, total steel consumption by the motor industry will exceed all previous records.

Fully 80 per cent of the weight of the average car is steel, although only a small fraction of the purchase price, probably not more than 300, is represented by the cost of the steel.

In the early days of the motor car industry, special steels for the new "horseless carriage" were unknown. Then, a little later, motor car makers began to feature in their advertising such items as a few coats of enamel or lacquer

Stars Lose Romance Through Telescope

NEW WILMINGTON, Pa.—If you are looking for romance and beauty in the skies, don't look through a telescope.

Westminster College students pondered that advice after listening to Dr. Roy K. Marshall, Wilson College astronomer, who addressed the student body.

"Human beings are lucky," Dr. Marshall said, "when they look at the stars with their naked eyes. Planets, stars and the Milky Way lose much of their romance and beauty when seen through a telescope.

More than 2,500 stars are visible on a clear night, but there are 30 thousand million stars within the range of the largest telescope. Stars are named for wives, sweethearts, for presidents, and have even been auctioned off to the highest bidder to be named as the buyer chooses.

CITY ASKS FOR BIDS ON POWER UNIT

The following letter, which is self-explanatory, gives facts and figures in connection with the advertising for bids for a Diesel unit to be used in pumping the city water. The letter, which was received by the Times Saturday afternoon, reads as follows: Dear Sir: In answer to your inquiry regarding the call for bids for a Diesel unit to be used in pumping the water for the City of Ranger, I would like to make the following statements: Taking our audit reports as authority, the amount the waterworks has paid for power for the ten-year period beginning May 1, 1926, and ending April 30, 1936, is $36,118.70. This figure does not include the cost of street lighting and other electric costs of the city. In 1926 the city installed two electrically-driven pumps, one of 600-gallon per minute capacity and the other of 500-gallon per minute capacity. A close study of the power cost showed that it cost 4.3c per thousand gallons to move water with the 600-gallon pump and 3.4c per thousand gallons with the 500-gallon pump. This variation in cost is due to the variation in "head" the pumps operate against. In 1932 it was decided to use a smaller pump operating over a longer period of time but handling the required amount of water within an 18 to 24-hour period. This unit was installed at a cost of $1070.00, and it was found that the cost per thousand gallons of water moved was reduced from 4.3c and 3.4c respectively to 2.55c. This unit was installed in January, 1933, and the savings in power the first year were sufficient to pay for this smaller unit. A well-known manufacturer of Diesel engines has gone over our "set-up" and after a careful study of the situation, states that their unit will move water for less than .5c per thousand gallons. To put the situation in its shortest words our records show that for the period, Oct. 1, 1935 to Sept. 30, 1936; water pumped, 110 million gallons; power bill for period, $2,700.97. The makers of the Diesel unit claim this 110 million gallons can be moved for $660.00, which amount includes fuel and lubricating oils, repairs and maintenance. You will note that no reference is made to depreciation. Of course, this Diesel unit will wear out (15 years is the life of one, according to the manufacturer). As to the electrical units--they are not worn out, but obsolescence has taken its toll. The city can no longer afford to use the two larger units which cost nearly as much as a Diesel unit, and are only ten years old. It costs too much to operate them. The city commission is taking all the facts, suggestions and claims under advisement with a view of saving money for the city. You will note that they reserve the right to reject any and all bids without explanation. Their attitude is best expressed by a remark of one of its members which was "We must not only reasonably sure of a substantial saving--we must be absolutely certain." A visit is planned by members of the commission to certain cities using Diesel power, with a view of ascertaining their costs, experiences, etc. It is a safe bet they will be certain of a substantial saving or they will make no change. THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER WASHINGTON--One of the reasons John L. Lewis and the United Mine Workers are citing President Bill Green of the American Federation of Labor for trial is that this is one of Lewis' ideas of having fun. Another reason is that Lewis, in the great battle between the Committee for Industrial Organization and the federation, believes it's good tactics to harass the enemy. And still another reason is that Lewis was more than willing to expose the phoniness of persistent reports of peace negotiations and practically close the door against any compromise gestures from the A. F. of L. convention at Tampa, where the C. I. O. unions will not be represented. Mr. Green may not be in so silly a position as the C. I. O. leaders privately insist he is, but his position is extremely peculiar just the same. It is even more peculiar since he was cited for trial than it was before. Mr. Green must be a member of an A. F. of L. union to be an A. F. of L. officer. He is a member of the United Mine Workers, but that union has been suspended from the federation by Mr. Green and other members of the federation's executive council and the chances are that it will soon be expelled. QUESTION as to Mr. Green's eligibility to be president continues to be raised. Now the U. M. W. comes along to point out that as far as it is concerned, Mr. Green is just an ordinary union member and accuses him of conspiring against, working against, and maligning his own union. Subsequently, it is believed, he will be ordered to "cease and desist" and the eventual upshot is expected to be his expulsion from the mine workers' organization. All of which makes the task of Mr. Green no less painful at the Tampa convention. The very word "cease and desist" is being used by the committee investigating activities of the Black Legion. But the results of that investigation, if any, are for the time being kept a deep secret.

Cardinals will be the second National League club to resort to the lights next season. Washington and Philadelphia--outfits of the junior loop can't make up their minds, although both are in dire need of help in the way of attendance. Their reluctance to play at night is characteristic of the major leagues--always slow to see needs for changes and slower to adopt new ideas. Night baseball must come in the big show, outside of the larger centers at least, and two seasons of it in Cincinnati furnished positive proof of its practicability and lucrative qualities. PAUL'S PARTING COUNSELS

Devotional Reading: Psalm 121 BY WM. E. GILROY, D. D. Editor of Advance THE essentials of Paul's practical philosophy of life are emphasized in the intimacy of his personal letters, such as the letters to Timothy and Titus. In the larger Epistles are emphasized the deep and profound matters of Paul's religious faith, but in the personal letters these things are interpreted in terms of attitude and action in daily life. One need only consider the whole Christian movement since the days of the Master's life on earth to realize that professed faith and daily living have not always been the same thing. Men have professed great and noble convictions, but oftentimes these great convictions have not beautified or ennobled their words and deeds, or their relations toward their fellow men. It was the glory of Paul's life that his practices matched his profession. In these personal letters, we find emphasized, in an intimate way and with concrete detail, the great teachings that for him were implied in Christianity. IN the letters from which our lesson is taken, we find the mature flowering of Paul's thought and life. He was now an old man, nearing the close of a busy and active life of great achievement and of profound satisfaction. Paul described himself as a soldier of Jesus Christ. He had fought the good fight of faith, and in old age he was reaping the rewards of fidelity, consecration, and courage. He had staked his life upon the things that stood the test of time. The material gain that men sought he had despised as beneath the concern of a Christian man, and now, as he drew near the end in death, he found this attitude vindicated in the realization that, as he brought nothing into the world, he could carry nothing out. The love of money he saw as the root of all evil, whereas godliness with contentment was a great gain, and contentment, if a man's heart was right, could be established with very little. "Having food and covering," said Paul, "let us be therewith contented." These were great words to offer a young man nearer the threshold of life. They were the offerings of a rich and profound experience to one who had the opportunity to work them out, and test them in years to come. WHAT a profound thing for a man to feel such confidence in God, and in the integrity of his own soul! What a tower of strength to a man to feel that God was with him, and that he could depend through faith upon the power of the Almighty to support and sustain him! A man may make the mistake of assuming too readily that God is on his side, as Paul did in the days of his persecuting zeal. But when, with open mind and heart, a man has given his life to the doing of the will of God, when all worldly considerations are denied, and all years are passed, the sense of peace that fills the soul of a man dependent on God is also a source of power.

SISTER MARY'S KITCHEN

By NEA Service *SPARERIBS! The very word calls up visions of my childhood home and the good smelly kitchen where plain homely food was cooked. That's a loving sigh quoted from Della T. Lute's exciting "Book of Menus With Recipes" which American cooks will enjoy. Read on, and you and your hungry family will see why enjoyment lurks between its well-printed pages. "Baked Stuffed Spareribs" whole fresh (not corned) spareribs (as many as your family will consume with eagerness). Trim off the thin skin covering. Make a bread stuffing with plenty of onion, sage, savory, and highly seasoned with salt, pepper and butter. Moisten the bread with apple sauce very slightly seasoned (you'll have to admit that's a grand way to moisten anything). Rub the spareribs with salt and pepper, put in roasting pan with half a cup of water. Bake in hot oven (400 degrees F.) for 3-4 hours, then spread over with stuffing and bake for half an hour longer. Reading Ravenously All of which proves that the reading of new cook books is a solace for the soul and a thrill for the appetite. The Joy of Cooking--yes, that's really the title of another handsome new cook book. Sit fit for any Santa Claus to give to any puzzled housewife. Irma S. Rombauer caused a sensation in St. Louis kitchens when she wrote it. Why? Well, how does this taste: "Potato Croquettes." Filled with Green Peas: about 12 croquettes. Cook 2 pounds green peas. Peel and boil until tender 4 large potatoes. Mash them. There should be about 2 cups. Beat into them 1 tablespoon butter, 2 tablespoons cream, 2 egg yolks. Season with 1 teaspoon salt, 10 drops onion juice, 1-4 teaspoon paprika, 1-1/2 teaspoon nutmeg, 1 tablespoon minced parsley. Beat the potatoes until they are smooth. Form them into 2 1/2 inch balls.
