Roosevelt's Followers Met Test Nobly, Too

There has been many a review of the last four years in the papers of late. No one could read of the second Roosevelt inaugural without looking back at the first one and thinking of all the things that have happened between the two.

The general consensus is that M.r Roosevelt has done a first-rate job and that we are all deeply indebted to him.

That is probably very true. But it occurs to us that the man who deserves the biggest bouquet of all these days is nobody but John Citizen himself, the ordinary man of these United States.

Mr. Roosevelt gave us leadership, of course, and it was like the shadow of a mighty rock in a weary land. But a leader has to have followers, and in democracy the followers have to be wide-awake, level-headed people who know what the score it Without them, the leader quickly finds himself heading a one-man parade to nowhere.

And the way the plain people of the country responded to leadership at a time when such response was needed is something for the record books.

All of which is just another way of saying that neither Mr. Roosevelt nor any other president can do it all. In the long run, the way we solve the tremendous problems of the twentieth century will depend on the good sense and the good will of the average man. And the encouraging thing today is the way in which the average man has met the test of the last four years.

Let's go back to March 4, 1933. Mr. Roosevelt took charge of a nation that was out on its feet. It had been gypped and misled and taken up dark alleys; many of its factories and all its banks were closed, and its leading citizens were afraid to walk past cemeteries late at night.

" .... if these over was one, was country ripe for chasmg false gods. And the talse gods were on the scene, too, begging to be chased-the Huey Longs, the Father Coughlins, the Doc Townsends, and the Kerald K. Smiths, flanked by the death's head hussars of the Libetry League.

But the country somehow kept its head. It listened to all these people, trailed along for a while, and then let them go their way alone. And in the end the tremendous vote rolled up for Mr. Roosevelt last year was simply the country's vote of confidence in-itself.

And if we have recovered our confidence, dispelled the shadows, and climbed out of the valley of the depresion, don't forget that it was pretty largely the doing of the ordinary American.

NEW YORK .- If Don Lash learns to distribute his effort uniformly, he may this winter lower Paavo Nurmi's indoor two-mile record of 8.58.2 and 3000-meter board track mark of 8.26.4. Lash established the outdoor two mile figures at 8.58.3 last summer on the lightning-like Princeton path. Fighting a wind which blew rain in his face, the Indiana University boy came within one-tenth of a second of Nurmi's mark, the fastest ever made indoors or out. Lash recorded his first indoor victory in three years the other night by ankling 3000 meters, 240 yands less than two miles, in 8.32.4 to beat Joe McCluskey by half a lap in the Brooklyn K. of C. neet. Critics agree that Lash goes out too fast in the early stages. "Maybe they are right, but a runner knows himself better than an outsider can and I've found by experience that I make my best time when I-crowd my best running into the first half," says Lash

LASH had begun to suspect that he never would beat anybody indoors when he hoofed it home first in the 3000-meter event at the 106th Infantry Armory in Flatbush.

'I need solid footing," asserts the Hoosier flyer. "Most indoor tracks-the Milrose strip in particular-are too springy for me. Those jouncing boards tire my calf muscles and I tie up after a mile or so. The flat armory floor suited me better than the more resilient Garden track. The surface felt firmer under foot. It was more like the solid cinder or dirt tracks to which I'm accustomed." Unlike Glenn Cunningham and Gene Venzke, Lash is chiefly an outdoor legman. Although he weighs only 145 pounds, he is tightly knitted and pretty rugged. Wind resistance has to be very strong to bother him

Drooklyn. He felt that he could come close to it if his legs could stand the beard track pounding. Nurmi wore spikes when he made his record. The field in which Lash competed had to use sneakers.

LASH did 2:10.8 for the first 800 meters-almost five seconds under L Nurmi's record time at that stage. He hit the 1500-meter mark in 4:06.2, only three seconds behind Mel Sheppard's Olympic figures in 1908.

"Up to that point I was running easily and had Nurmi's schedule beaten, but the fast pace told on me," explains the Indiana star. "My legs began to tie up. It took me 21 seconds to run the next 100 meters. I had lost my drive and was laboring a bit.

"I finally got striding again and finished strong, but my second half time of 4.26.2, contrasted with my first 1500 meters in 4.06.2, shows how I slacked off. Nurmi ran his two halves much more evenly. He would have nailed me at 2000 meters or so."

Experts contend that a runner of Lash's ability can save yard's and seconds on an 11-lap banked turn indoor track where there is no wind resistance. They declare that the turns are an asset rather than handicap to a skilled board track runner.

It would seem that Lash, the finest American distance product in istory, has only to gait himself to wipe out the last two of all Nurmi's indoor records.
