Wilson's 1937 crop from 118 cows, most of them hand bred, totaled 114 calves, all hereafter. Registered bulls are used and Wilson swears around so as to avoid breeding to his own breed. He has used registered bulls since 1918. He daily gives his cows a balanced ration and he attributed the high per cent of his calf crop to the good condition and high grade of his cows. He found it profitable to sell his calves when they are eight to nine months old. At present, his herd includes, besides 118 cows, 30 yearlings and a few two-year olds. Wilson also runs about 800 each of Angora goats and ramboillet sheep.

STEEL ROLLS IN MILLS OF EAST CHICAGO

EAST CHICAGO, July 1.—Steel began rolling again today in the huge Indiana Harbor Mills of the Inland Steel Company, while Indiana officials sought to extend the first "settlement" of the seven-states steel strike. Lewis' steel workers organizing committee was broken at midnight when representatives of both sides signed a "memorandum of agreement" with the state labor department. Seven hours later 4,000 men, weary from celebration, filed into the Inland plant. By Monday company officials believed all 13,000 men would be back at work. An additional 7,000 remained out at the Youngstown plant, which was picketed by 2,500 men and women. Youngstown Sheet and Tube Company, Bethlehem Steel Corporation and Republic Steel Corporation continued to defy the S. W. O. C. demands that they sign a written wages and hour agreement. While Bethlehem and Republic continued to operate Youngstown did not operate its East Chicago mills today.

Figuring Wage Gains Over the Long Run

The rather furious race toward readjustment of employment conditions in commerce and industry has allowed today's worker little time to browse about, take stock of what has already happened, and figure how he will fit into the scheme of things after the smoke clears away.

Legally and sentimentally, the worker is entitled to whatever jubilation he may find in his new position. But if he is to be thoroughly honest with himself, he must sit down and with cold figures determine which side of the economic balance sheet he will occupy after his demands are granted.

An illustration of the wisdom of this sort of thing occurred in New York City with the granting of the new six and seven-hour day pacts in the building trades.

The contractors, from whom the agreement was obtained, insist that they are, for all practical purposes, only hired men, and that the real bosses are the people who put up the money for the buildings. And, pushing the point to its conclusion, they say that increased costs under the wage and hour agreements, together with higher cost of material, will cause builders to cancel construction of new projects.

It is argued further that the new agreements do not take into consideration the seasonal nature of building work or the added unprofitable time between start and completion of a structure, due to slackened production.

The case of the plasterers has been cited as an example of how the thing may work out. Here, say the contractors, the boss is the architect who is figuring out costs and results. With the plasterers' working day cut to six hours, and their wage increased to $2 an hour, the architect seeks and finds a cheaper plaster substitute—and then gives the work to carpenters or masons.

Supposing the contractor to be blessed with the most benevolent attitude toward his men, he still claims he is powerless to prevent the workers' total annual income from decreasing, in spite of the higher hourly wage.

From the workers' viewpoint, the wage and hour agreement was a rightful triumph, duly won under existing laws and wholly in accordance with the spirit of the times. Even the contractors make no issue there.

What does seem unfortunate is that the building employes apparently have acquired a victory garland studded with mighty pesky thorns. The contractors have been placed in a ticklish spot at the mercy of the laws of supply and demand; the architects are being forced into using less durable substitute materials, all while the building public hesitates before its next step.

If those comedians are compelled to pay for the material they are charged with swiping, it would seem that a fortune awaits the heirs of Joe Miller.

Texas Finds That "Tourism" Is Its Second Largest Industry To Date

DALLAS—Texas, "the state that has everything," has been taking stock of itself as a merchant of "tourism," and has found that its traditions, scenery, hospitality and climate are just as marketable for hard cash—as the cotton, wool, oil, meat, sulphur, gas and spinach that it has been supplying the rest of the country all these years.

Now entering its second year in the world's fair business, Texas finds that tourists constituted its second largest industry in 1936—the $445,000,000 that tourists spent in the state last year being topped only by the $450,000,000 oil industry of the state. Agricultural crops, at $384,000,000, and cotton, at $210,000,000 ranked third and fourth.

Furthermore, increased auto touring into and within the state accounted for a gain of $4,000,000 in state retail gasoline tax revenue alone, more than liquidating the state's $3,000,000 appropriation for the 1936 Centennial—a cool million profit for the state's own coffers right there. As a result, says a report of the All-South Development Council, sentiment is fast crystallizing throughout the state in favor of a long-term advertising and publicity program, to continue and consolidate the gains scored through the Centennial and Pan-American expositions.

A major point made by Lieut. Gov. Walter Woodul, chief proponent of a five-year, $3,000,000 advertising plan, has been that not only would the resulting tourist revenue pay dividends on the cash investment, but that permanent new residents, among them industrialists looking for sites for decentralization and expansion, would accrue and, he says, "We need more people and capital to give us the push." That Texas can get her share of the four-and-three quarter-billion national tourist crop by dint of thorough advertising was proved by the "take" of Centennial year, bulwarked by analysis of the things Texas has yet to show the nation in the way of parks, caverns and playgrounds. That hard-headed industry will be as easily lured, however, in the face of Texas' unstable tax situation, is open to serious doubt, says the Council's report.

Rodeo Performer Stage a Sit-Down

ELECTRA, Texas.—Rodeo boys, who make their living riding aboard bucking horses, steers, delayed a rodeo here recently by a "sit-down" against the judges' decision. Hughie Long of Fort Worth, spokesman for the "strike" said 25 riders were protesting cause some competitors were permitted to slap bucking steers with their hands and hats—a violation of standard riding rules. When show officials declined to get new judges, the cowboys down along a corral fence would not participate in the urday afternoon performance. Long said that the strikers were all members of the Cow Turtle association, a national organization, but that the association had nothing to do with "sit-down."

CAROLEE COLT, heroine.
STUART BLAKE, Stuart's brother.
HELEN COLT, Carolee's mother.
PAUL AND SILAS COLTER, prospectors.
NINA BLAKE, Stuart's sister.

Yester day, Stuart becomes lost in the mountains, suffers delirium, and finally falls asleep on a patch of back brush, utterly exhausted.

CHAPTER VIII

THERE was nothing especially romantic about the way they found Stuart Blake. Silas Colter saw him first, and grasped his father's arm.

"Ain't-ain't that a man away over yonder?" He was staring in the distance.

It was a man, undoubtedly. Silas unconsciously cocked the rifle he carried. The man was staggering, half crawling. But he wasn't menacing. He hadn't even seen the Colters, in fact.

Carolee was with the Colters that day, but that was just a chance. She had hung out her signal on the morning after her experience with Stuart, but she had not met her down trail.

That had piqued her considerably; she'd wait a week or more before she tried to signal him again, she promised herself. Paul Colter had gone alone to study the high plateau country, and Silas and the rafter had spent a day at wood gathering. On the second day they and Carolee went mine hunting.

She saw the man in the distance, but didn't recognize him.

"He's in trouble, isn't he?" she remarked.

"They had no field glasses, and he was several hundred yards away. They turned to get nearer him."

"It's that Blake fellow!" Old man Colter recognized him first.

"Oh!" cried Carolee.

They all spurred their horses to move as fast as the rugged terrain permitted.

STUART still didn't see them. He appeared not to see them even when they dismounted in his presence. He had been deceived by many a mirage.

"Stuart!" Carolee spoke to him. Nobody noticed her familiarity.

He didn't answer. He couldn't have answered, anyway. He just kept looking. His face was rather black, his clothing torn. They gave him water, put him in the shade. The Colter men had to hold him off the water, once he got a sip. They let him drink a swallow at a time, with considerable interval. Carolee bathed his brow with a moistened handkerchief. Nobody did any talking for a long while. Silas had a can of peaches in his pack, and fed Stuart the sweet juice, then some of the fruit. After that Stuart slept. They sat with him until he revived and recognized them as real people, not phantoms.

"Carolee!" he murmured, and smiled. She smiled back and asked, gently, "Do you feel better?"

He drank more water, and ate more of the food they offered. Strength was flowing back into him. "This—Wednesday?" he asked.

"Thursday," she said. "What happened? How long have you been here? Who is with you?"

"Nobody. Nothing happened. I mean, my horse fell over a cliff and killed himself. Yesterday, I suppose. Where are the panthers?"

It was his last memory, and his speech was confusing. He realized he'd have to explain.

"I found some mountain lion babies, panthers. Like those in the filling station zoo. Not the old ones. I expected them to come and tear into me."

"They don't do people no harm," Mr. Colter said, watching Stuart intently. "Where's your horse?"

"I don't know. Dead somewhere, on the rocks. Busted my canteen and lost the water all out. I had no idea thirst would be like that. My tongue is still thick and hard. It was hellish."

The Colters, of course, had to help Stuart out of the mountain. He wanted to walk, but Carolee insisted that he ride and Silas gave up his horse. Carolee did most of the talking for her family.

"Were you hunting gold, too?" she inquired, cheerfully.

"Well, yes, I was. In a way. Not too seriously, but—" He glanced in some concern at the other two men. "I mean, I was just tracing down some of the more or less for fun. I'm not—I wouldn't of course interfere with anybody else. Just adventuring. You know what I mean."

HE felt he was talking himself into a pocket. He had already

THE Chicago Cubs lost six out of their first seven games this season and applications for Manager Charley Grimm's job immediately poured into the front office.

Applications are still stacking up at Wrigley Field, but they're no longer applications for Professor Grimm's chair. Now they are requests for world series seats.

According to the experts, the Cubs owe it all to a wild young right-handed pitcher, who was supposed to be exiled to the minors when spring time came; a daffy young southpaw who, during spring training, had nothing more than his fingerprints on the ball; a rookie center fielder who was almost chased back to the bushes in one of Professor Charley's rare fits of temper; and a first baseman relieved from the Gas House in St. Louis.

The young right-hander, Mr. Clay Bryant, has proved himself to be the most effective relief pitcher in the National League. His Johnny-on-the-spot hurling was the big feature the day that the Cubs snatched the league lead from the New York Giants.

And, strangely, Mr. Bryant was almost left out on the Pacific Coast when the Cubs broke up their training quarters and started home back in April. Seems he was wilder than a Saturday night party. Yet, somehow or other, control was his biggest asset in compiling a string of 18 consecutive scoreless innings of relief pitching.

THE young southpaw, Mr. Clyde Shoun, has been a sensation in Broadway, having won three games over the Giants so far.

He is something of a Dizzy Dean in nature, the boys say. Gabby and always stirring up fights. However, he fights his own battles. The rookie center fielder, Mr. Joe Marty, seems to have shaken off the curse of being called the National League Joe DiMaggio and is League last season.

A first it looked like Joe was going to be another Paul Strand. Grimm, disgusted with the youth's sins, almost gave up all hope for him. Once, after Marty had failed to deliver in the clutch at bat and had cost the Cubs a ball game by failing to touch up at third base on a long fly, Grimm's temper boiled over and he let loose a terrific blast at the rookie.

That night the baseball reporters asked Grimm if Marty would continue to patrol center field.

"You bet he will," said Grimm. "Anybody who can take what's coming to him in the spirit Marty did can play ball for me. He'll do all right."

Joe's reform at bat and field dates from that day. He's now hitting well over 300.

Jimmy (The Ripper) Collins has done more than solve Professor Grimm's first base problem. He has fired the Cubs with some of the Gas House Gang spirit.

And they're a different lot this year. Last season's defeatist complex can't get to first base with Jimmy Collins there.

BEAN and peas are big news show. The snap bean crop is estimated at 67 per cent greater than last year's, and the June pea crop is rated at 71 per cent higher.

That good news adds this little fact—these vegetables are among the good vitamin and mineral group. Snap beans are rich in calcium and vitamin A, a good source of iron, phosphorus and vitamin C, and a fair source of vitamin B. Peas are a rich source for the pellagra-preventing factor.

If you don't fully realize how important these seemingly dull facts are, look at children who do not get the necessary elements in their diet. Human misery is more than dramatic—it is tragic. Watch your vitamins and minerals if you must feed children along the way to sturdy and happy man and womanhood.

Select only snap beans with pods of uniform size. They will cook evenly. Get pods that are fresh, bright green, clean and free from blemishes. Avoid dull, wilted looking beans. If the pods snap easily, they are good buys. Avoid the crooked ones and those too sharply pointed.

Peas should have bright green pods, be velvety and fresh looking. Flat, dirty green pods mean old ones. Yellow is the color of age in a pea, too. Peas, remember, deteriorate faster than snap beans because of their sugar content. The sugar changes rapidly into starch and the delicate pea flavor is then lost. So if the peas must be kept sometime before cooking, keep them in a cool place, so as to slow down this

Snake Hoax Turned On the Police Dept.
FORT WORTH, Texas—An eight-year old boy warned against playing on a vacant lot near his home because "snakes are there," turned the tables of psychology on his mother and made the police department the victim of the hoax.

The lad's mother decided upon the "snake" story after persistent requests for permission to play on the lot. One afternoon, his mother out of the house, the son devised a scheme to clear the lot of "snakes."

He telephoned the police department to send out a patrolman to kill a "big rattlesnake." Scout Officers Richard Mumford and J. D. Crane were dispatched to the scene. They searched the lot minutely, and were interrupted when the mother informed them that the "snake" was for her son alone.

Woman Ate Melons with Famed Outlaw

By United Press
KERRVILLE, Texas—A 64-year-old Kerrville woman, Mrs. Benjamin F. Bennett, can recall eating watermelon with the noted outlaw, Sam Bass.

On a sultry midsummer day in 1881, Mrs. Bennett, then Lula Belle Turner, age 11, was accompanying her parents by covered wagon from Terrell to the Plains. They drove their wagon under a tree to stop for lunch. Under the tree they saw a stalwart, grizzled man, sleeping with his head on a saddle, bridle reins tied to his foot, and his horse grazing quietly. The man was Sam Bass.

When the sound of creaking wagon wheels reached his ears, sat up, alert. The Turners invited him to dine with them, and together they shared a big, red watermelon.

Mrs. Bennett's father, John Turner and partner operated the first stage line to run from Terrell to Dallas and Paris, and Mrs. Bennett took occasional trips with her father.

On one of these trips she met Frank James, brother of Jesse James. When she shook hands with James, he remarked to her father: "This kid's been readin' outlaw books. I can tell by the way she shakes hands."

Frank James at that time employed by a mercantile firm in Dallas.

The public which imposes comedians by asking them to funny outside working hours doing it just for a joke.
