Union Disputes Have a Middle Ground, Too

The United States, having had a rather severe course in the hothouse pressure method of labor union development, seems to be more and more interested in the possibility that unions now can be set out in common ground, there to be subject to the same laws and regulations that control other questions of public interest.

Germ of this idea comes from the experience of European countries, especially Holland and England, where trade unions have flourished for years.

While conservatives here argue that it is because of restraint and compulsions that unions abroad have attained their position of respectability, there is another group which contends that strikes and other direct actions were necessary to force that view onto employers and the public.

There is some truth in both views, but both overlook the sensible middle ground where disagreements may be dissolved.

In the first place, there is no British law requiring unions to carry out contracts with employers. No union is required to incorporate or submit to an audit except in the case of its political fund. A union cannot be sued for damages except in case of illegal strike, which the law defines.

But Britain has not altogether overlooked the matter of regulation. Most unions must register and make yearly reports on sources of revenue and spending. Sympathetic strikes are forbidden if they are calculated to coerce the government indirectly, or if they inflict hardship on the community. Satisfied workmen may not be intimidated into joining a strike, and public service employees must not that breaks the law, then they alone are held responsible.

Then there is the middle ground, amounting to nothing more than a deep-rooted respect for law and order, plus the fact that the highly competent British labor leaders require members to strike or return to work without questioning the order. If the leaders give an order that breaks the law, then they alone are held responsible.

On the government side, this unwritten code of fair play is observed, too, an instance being the coronation bus strike. Had the Transport board used strike breakers to put the buses back on the streets, that would have been a violation of the understanding by which most British strikes are settled.

Now a reckless labor union or an irresponsible government could find plenty of loopholes to wreck the operation of these "understandings." But the significant thing is that, nine times out of ten, they don't. Thus, the rock-ballasted wall against which erosive dissension and violence dissipate themselves in most British labor question is nothing more than a rule of reason.

The United States, facing a division on future policy in this field, would do well to reflect that there is no monopoly on good judgment or respect for law and order, and that it doesn't take an act of Congress to put law and order into operation.

Mail Robberies Are Recalled By Oldest Postmaster In Nation

By United Press MONTPELLIER, Calif., Aug. 23.—When A. J. Yancey, 76, closed the window marked "United States Mail" in his country store, it marked the end of a 30-year career which has proven as exciting at times as it could be peaceful, in this small, California town. In the three decades Yancey has distributed letters from his gridded window, robbers have found their way 18 times to the little store hidden behind rolling hills. They came at first by horseback, then on freight trains and, more recently, by automobile. Heavy iron bars placed on all windows of the store proved unavailing and Yancey finally rigged up a burglar alarm—one of the first ever made—to his home several hundred feet away. When the alarm sounded the entire house-

Blind Barman Says Never Spills a Drop

By United Press ST. LOUIS, Aug. 23.—Sensitive fingers and infallible memory, said sightless Jack Miller, St. Louis bartender and tavern owner, to keep pace with more fortunate colleagues. Almost-unheard-of are unseeing bartenders. The reason, perhaps, is drinking men's hearts are unable to stand the sight of spilled liquor. But Miller is not one to spill precious liquids, and change customers. A wizard at drink mixing, unflinching, Miller selects a brand from a shelf of neatly arranged bottles. Into a glass he pours whiskey, explaining: "Observe the whiskey is warm and as it rises in the glass its heat is transferred to my fingers. I can tell exactly how much I have in this glass at any given time. "If the drink requires two-thirds whiskey, I stop pouring right there—just like that."

What some of America's aquatic stars say about Camels

SPRINGBOARD ACE. Lovely Jane Fauntz Manske, of Chicago, says: "It's Camels for me! Good digestion is of prime importance to me. Tense competition and all the changes of diet when traveling are liable to upset digestion. But I smoke Camels at mealtimes and after and my digestion runs smoothly." The best of meals tastes better and digests easier when you have an abundant flow of digestive fluids—alkaline digestive fluids. Smoking Camels encourages this flow—helps you enjoy a sense of well-being. Steady smokers say: "Camels set me right!"

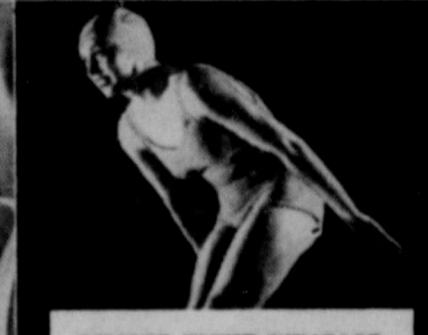

HAROLD ("DUTCH") SMITH, Olympic diving champion, would "walk a mile for a Camel!" "I find a great deal of pleasure in Camels," says "Dutch." "I long ago discovered that smoking a Camel restores my flow of energy after a strenuous meet—gives an invigorating 'lift.'"

THREE-TIME OLYMPIC WINNER in the high-diving event, Dorothy Poynton Hill, of Los Angeles—a steady Camel smoker—says: "I prefer Camels because they don't get on my nerves. And they have such a rich, delicate flavor and never tire my taste."

"PETE" DESJARDINS—another famous diver—speaking: "Divers like a mild cigarette that doesn't upset their nerves. That's why I prefer to smoke Camels."

LENORE KIGHT WINGARD—a champion of champions in speed swimming, comments on smoking: "After an exhausting swim, I get a 'lift' with a Camel."

AQUAPLANE EXPERT. Miss Gloria Wheeden can do hand-stands on an aquaplane. Lurching on the speed boat, she says: "I get so much benefit smoking Camels at meals."

CAST OF CHARACTERS
KATHLEEN O'SHANN—heroine, sister of the Duke.
BOB McTAVISH—hero, detective.
PAT—the butler who played cupid.
THE DUCHESS—patron of the artist.
PROFESSOR BRACEY—Egyptologist.

CHAPTER X
FOR the next 10 days, the studio apartment house was buzzing with preparations and excitement. The Duchess' fancy dress ball was the subject of much comment in the papers and among the various set groups of the city.

"It's baby as a loon she is, and all the rest of 'em'll be the same," Pat thought. Pat told Bob one day, "We're all done up with stress and strain, though to drive anybody nuts that ain't already had way." Then he came closer and asked softly out of one corner of his mouth, "You're goin', ain't you?"

"She invited me all right," Bob answered, "and I'll be there, though not for the reason she thinks I suggested she have my friend Steve Carnahan, from headquarters, and not tell anybody he's coming, if he ain't stuck to wear her famous emerald."

Pat nodded. "She'll wear the emerald, all right. Always does when she gives a big blowout. We'll like to be murdered in our beds some day on account of it. The Steve now?"

"He's a detective, and a good one," Bob pulled him inside the room and closed the door. "Say, you're helping the electrician, aren't you? Think we could fix it so that everyone would pass in front of a big light—to show off their costumes or something?"

PAT thought a minute, then he grinned. "Sure. Some of them times would like nothin' better. I can put it up to the Duchess so she'll fall for it in a big way. Let it to me. We'll rig up a regular shadow-box like's down at the jail, and give 'em the one-over in foine shape—or for foine shapes rather."

The night of the big ball, Kathleen blissfully put on her Irish peasant costume, and tied a green ribbon around her head. All the pleasure and excitement over the party had gone, because it was Professor Bracey who was to be her partner for the evening. Once or twice she had heard Bob and his dog pass her door and had hoped they would stop. But always they had gone on, while she reluctantly turned back to her desk.

Fittingly enough, Professor Bracey chose to come to the ball dressed as an Egyptian Pharaoh. Kathleen gasped with astonishment when she opened the door to the stately figure, whose black eyes only seemed to be alive. In his hand he carried a tiny statue of an Egyptian god.

"My!" she told him, "You actually gave me a start, you look so regal and—and so sinister." "While you're so beautiful and young," he replied.

THE Duchess' huge studio had been transformed into a tropical garden, where brilliant birds glittered among the palms and wicker flowers and little fountains sprayed tinted jets of water. The soft music of stringed instruments drifted dreamily over the whole scene, weaving a magic spell of glamour that suited the fantastic, wonderful costumes of the guests.

"Like it, Colleen?" asked the tall classman coming up behind Kathleen. For a minute she turned to him bewildered, then, "Bob! How wonderful you look! With your suit and sporan and Glengarry bonnet. You must look exactly like some of your ancestors. What did Schmatz think of you?"

"Not much of the smell of moth balls, which my clothes have been packed in. I knew they had these duds at home, so I sent for them. My family is certain now that I am crazy. Want to walk around and give the place the once-over? Your Pharaoh seems to be busy with the Duchess. She beckoned to him when you came in. Get an eyeful of that big emerald she's wearing. It's lots with jewel connoisseurs, I understand."

KATHLEEN looked at their hostess, then her eyes widened in astonishment. "Did you ever see anything so amazing? No wonder she came dressed like a queen. She's more beautiful than anyone in the room."

Kathleen looked again at the Duchess, who was sitting on a marble seat before a bank of roses. Professor Bracey was leaning over her, his smoldering gaze on the beauty of her white neck and shoulders which her elaborate velvet costume displayed to the best advantage. Around her throat was a flashing necklace of diamonds.

monds, and lovely gems gleamed from the small tiara on her head. But the famous emerald surpassed them all. It hung from a thin chain low against her breast. Its magnificence was breath-taking.

"Not many men could resist her tonight, could they?" Kathleen asked a little wistfully. "And of course to a man of the world like Professor Bracey, she would be especially interesting."

Before Bob could reply, a swift dart of light came winging across the room from the bow of a huge electrical Cupid, which seemed to be hovering above the tall bank of ferns, and fell full on the Duchess and Bracey. This brought a burst of applause, and made the Pharaoh put up his hand as though to shield his eyes from the brightness.

"Mat—that's Pat up there," Bob told Kathleen. "He's working the beam from the Cupid's bow. Can't you imagine how that would appeal to his sentimental Irish soul? He was telling me about it yesterday. Since your other partner seems detained, how about dancing?" He held out his arms and they drifted away to a dreamy waltz, weaving in and out among the crowd of gypsies, nymphs, cowboys, Indians, and harlequins.

FOR Kathleen all the months of heartbreaking work and worry were swept away and she was conscious only of a feeling of ecstasy that Bob's arms were about her, and his eyes were looking into hers.

"Cutting in, McTavish, and the queen orders you into her presence," said the Egyptologist's voice behind them. Bob scowled and reluctantly relinquished his partner, made his way to the side of the Duchess, who held out her hand and drew him down beside her.

"I've been waiting all evening to hear you say you love me, Bob dear," she began with regal audacity. "Most of the other men have already told me, but you're the only one who could really make it mean something to me."

Here was a dangerous woman with wealth and beauty and position, actually making love to him, an unknown writer. It was too ridiculous, too—

"You see I can't possibly believe you, Duchess, because I'm in love with someone else," he said slowly as though just realizing for the first time that this was so. "I'm in love with a girl who doesn't love me," he added.

BY HARRY GRAYSON
Sports Editor, NEA Service

NEW YORK—Gene Sarazen considers Ralph Guldahl's 281 in the United States Open at Oakland Hills the greatest golf exploit of the year—more impressive even than Henry Cotton's 290 in the British Open at Carnoustie.

Sarazen still can't figure how anybody could annihilate Oakland Hills as did Guldahl. Yet the Squire of Valley Ridge Farm calls Cotton a finer shot-maker than Guldahl. He classes the Chicagoan as a streaky player—doesn't like the way he loosens his grip at the top of his swing.

Like everybody else, Sarazen rates Harry Cooper as this country's finest shotmaker, but says that Lighthouse Harry is less effective than Cotton because he lacks the Briton's physical strength and unwavering determination. Cotton's long game has no equal in modern golf. Sarazen asserts that Sam Snead has greater potentialities than any other American golfer, but points out that the young man from White Sulphur Springs must develop headwork if he doesn't want to wind up among the might-have-beens.

Courses are built for strong backs and thoughtless heads. The British contend that you've missed your shot if you hit a 240-yard drive straight down the middle into a bunker. MANY of the so-called second-fighters hit the ball better than the top-fighters, but do not win championships because they park their brains in the locker room. "Speed is a natural swinger, but plays too many dumb shots at critical moments," explains Sarazen. "His judgment was poor at Carnoustie. I saw him take a brassie on the sixth hole, when he should have had a spoon, and pull the ball 70 yards off line and well beyond the green. "Sam complained about driving into cross-ditches and mid-fairway traps, but the hazards could be seen plainly from the tees. None of the Carnoustie holes are blind."

SARAZEN chuckles about winning the Chicago Open, the biggest money event of the season. They suspected that he was finished as a competitive golfer. Sarazen reveals that his trouble of late years has been the inability to wage the uphill fights that made him famous—swept him to victory at Fresh Meadow and in many other major battles. He got away well in Chicago. "In the old days a bad opening round acted like a shot in the arm for me," says the Italian. "I fought harder and played better golf when I had to come from behind."

Sarazen kicked away a half dozen big time titles by a stroke or two because of one bad hole, and fears that at this late date he gets to brooding over a mistake. He says it is something he must look now that he has demonstrated that he wasn't as far from a comeback as some of "b" boys suspected.

BEHIND THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON—It is rather generally understood here now that Belgian Premier Van Zeel—his first visit to Washington—had a chief objective a loan for Germany.

What isn't so generally known is the extent to which interested nations, including the British government's leadership, have been perched because Van Zeeland failed to impress even the elevator boys at the treasury. Van Zeeland was asked by the British government to offer Britain's enthusiastic help in calling a world economic-armaments conference if the United States would sponsor that German loan. Premier Neville Chamberlain had gathered the idea from Germany that she would try to be nice in European politics if she got the loan.

"THE PROGRESSIVE," a weekly describing itself as "LaFollette's Magazine," the president of which is Senator Bob LaFollette and the secretary Gov Phil LaFollette, both of Wisconsin, has started a poll reaching various states on the issue whether Franklin D. Roosevelt should seek a third term.

The question is: What was in the minds of the LaFollette boys who are now allied with Roosevelt and stand out as potential third party leaders, when they started this poll? Assuming that either Bob or Phil or both should have 1940 ambitions, why should either or both sponsor a poll which might well demonstrate—and may, in view of first returns—that their closest followers preferred Roosevelt?

Another possible assumption is that the LaFollette brothers may actually prefer to back Roosevelt at the next election, feeling that he is the best hope of the progressives.

WEEK after week, usually in magazines and seldom by newspaper correspondents—who know better—those presidential aides Tom Corcoran and Ben Cohen have been accused of hatching the plan to pack the Supreme Court.

Corcoran and Cohen, according to their friends, don't appreciate the accusation. They heard about the plan when they read about it in the newspapers. But the man who gets good and sore about those reports is Attorney General Hower S. Cummings, who actually sold the six-new-judges plan to Roosevelt and who is proud of that achievement.

Seashells at Shore Not Same at the Door
WALTHAM, Mass.—It's all right to sell seashells by the shore. But you can't sell seashells from door to door—at least not in Waltham. John Heilala of Maine claimed he made his living by selling seashells. District Judge Cuniff apparently was skeptical, as he refused to dismiss a drunkenness charge until Heilala assured the court he could obtain transportation back to Maine.

Married in Sunday Afternoon Ceremony at Abilene

Miss Margarette E. Sanders, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Sanders of Wink, was united in marriage to Mr. Arthur L. Wolf of Ranger. The wedding took place at the home of the groom's sister, Mrs. N. R. Long, of Abilene, at 1:30 Sunday afternoon.

A pretty ring ceremony was read by Dr. W. N. Murrell, while in the distance was played the beautiful melody, "I Love You Truly."

The bride wore a pretty gown of navy blue with matching accessories, with a corsage of sweet peas.

The wedding party was made up of immediate members of the family. Those present were the groom's mother, Mrs. Allie Wolf, of San Antonio; Mr. and Mrs. V. S. McCarver, Abilene; Mr. and Mrs. Page Curran, Austin, and Mr. and Mrs. N. R. Long and family.

The bride will be remembered in Ranger, having formerly made her home here.

Immediately following the ceremony, dinner was served. Mr. and Mrs. Wolf will make their home in Ranger.

Lumber Production Changing Slightly

AUSTIN, Texas.—Lumber production and shipments during July changed only slightly from the preceding month and the corresponding month last year, but unfilled orders increased sharply over both comparable periods, the University of Texas Bureau of Business Research stated in its monthly analysis of the lumber industry.

According to reports from the Southern Pine Association, average weekly production per unit of $18,790 board feet during July increased 1.9 per cent over the like month last year but declined 2 per cent from June. Shipments of 307,740 board feet per unit declined 1.8 per cent from July, 1936, but increased 7.2 per cent over the preceding month average. Average unfilled orders per unit on July 31, totaled 726,851 board feet, 20.3 per cent over those at the end of the preceding month and 23.9 per cent over the figure on July 31, 1936.

What Is Junior College Worth to City of Ranger?

By W. T. WALTON, President

The full value of any school from the one teacher unit, up through the university cannot be safely or accurately evaluated in financial terms. Yet this side is interesting to all of us and must be taken into consideration.

If the facts are faced frankly it will be seen that Ranger Junior College pays as a business enterprise. In its beginning it was an investment of the citizens of the Ranger Independent School District and its progress was enhanced by private subscriptions from many of the local people. This investment has been neglected by some of the patrons but it never has failed to pay big dividends for the amount invested.

The enrollment for its eleven sessions averaged more than seventy-eight each year. These students have spent from $25.00 to $200.00 each, per year, in the city of Ranger. If this is figured conservatively one would be safe in saying that the student body spends in the average of at least $500.00 each year with the business people here.

Then there are seven members of the faculty who give most of their time to the college and a large share of their salaries are spent in Ranger. Hence the college brings a minimum of $10,000.00 worth of business to the city of Ranger annually.

This is not all of the picture, for the social and educational contributions of the college must be considered also. Since it is a member of the American Association of Junior Colleges and the Texas Association of Colleges it's work is recognized by the higher institutions in each state. However, if this were not true the students and patrons would still gain by patronizing the local school for education is interwoven with life and cannot be measured in terms of credits any more than distance can be measured with a thermometer.

Each year the patrons and trustees of rural schools are asking to be transferred to the Ranger District so their high school children may complete their public school education here and find it convenient to continue in the

Rescue Fliers Are Awaiting Clear Skies

By United Press POINT BARROW, Alaska, August 23.—Rescue fliers waited near the Arctic Circle today for clearing weather to continue the search for six Russian aviators lost 10 days ago on a trans-polar flight.

In this way the college indirectly boosts Ranger and if more of the local people backed the college more people would move to the city to share and enjoy its advantages.

Penney Store to Be Host to Kids At Show Thursday

J. C. Penney company will be hosts to the kiddies of Ranger and the entire trade territory next Thursday when "Penrod and Sam" one of the latest pictures for school kiddies that has ever been written will be shown at the Arcadia at 10 a. m. Thursday, August 26.

Mr. Cooper at the Penney store is anxious that all children secure their free tickets as early as possible and the only request is that the kiddies must bring their father or mother with them to the store to get the tickets. This is necessary says Cooper, because I must work with the parents in this back to school show and want the approval of the parents before the children are given the tickets.

The picture is one of Booth Tarkington's latest stories, also Pop Eye and other features will be shown.

The children will assemble at the store at 9:30 next Thursday and a line of march will be formed in an orderly way to the Arcadia. Children must have their tickets before they will be admitted to the show. Secure your tickets at the J. C. Penney store today or tomorrow.
