Castle outlines with his field glasses, although he could see but little in the twilight. "It's about 600 feet, straight up," he told Mary Melissa. "No, not quite straight up, but nearly so. And you'll note the cliff above has a slight overhang. Centuries of erosion have cut back the softer under strata, where the Castle stands."

"Why is it called Defiance, Dr. Barry?"

"Because it has defied all efforts to explore it, and probably was impregnable as a fort when occupied. One archaeologist, from the State University, did manage to climb part way up, chiseling toe holds and using ropes. But even he slipped on the down trip and broke his leg. And until now nobody has appropriated money for a real effort at it."

Mary Melissa stared intently upward. Fast dying shadows of day seemed to create life in the old ruin.

"Looks ghostly," she ventured.

"It is. There's a wealth of legend about the place, Miss Lane. Many good yarns; some fact, maybe. These dwellings were abandoned before Columbus sailed. We don't know why."

"Goodness!" breathed the white girl. "It's fascinating."

"Yes!"

"Maybe the Indians drove them away. But where?"

"Can't say. There are Indian legends about it too, but they don't help much."

CHAPTER IV
ZACHARY "HADES" JONES came to life first. While the other three in his party still stared, he barked:

"A squaw! Looky thar, it's a squaw!"

The whole party laughed then, and Bob was quick to apologize. "Oh, I'm sorry, uh—Honey—what'd you say your name is? Honey Bee? We were not laughing at you, but at ourselves. You see, we expected a male cook, a man."

"I cook three white man's food," she repeated. "I cook it better than three white man's woman."

"Sure, sure, come on tonight anyway, Honey Bee, and cook supper and breakfast for us. We'll still be skirting the Indian country, and you can ride home tomorrow and send us a man. I'll pay you. It's all right."

The supper that night turned out to be perfect. With scant utensils, an outdoor fire, and a limited stock of supplies, Honey Bee quickly fed them generously and well. She even found time to disappear up a canyon evidently walled by an under-surface stream, and there pick a quantity of the odd plant called miner's lettuce, an unexpectedly delicious salad which she dressed with the rich brown juice of fried ham. It touched the men's appetites greatly.

"Nothin' but an Indian could do that," approved Holliman, picking his teeth, but Hades Jones mumbled:

"That first night was uneventful. Tassa slept soundly, despite her saddle sores, and the party was moving again at dawn. Cactus and brush forced them to ride single file most of this day, so that relatively conversation was impossible, but interest heightened—when they finally made camp within sight of their goal. They were near the foot of the great Castle cliff. It loomed impressively in the sunset glow. After supper, Bob studied the map. Between 1686 and 1689 nine expeditions were sent in search of La Salle, five by sea and four by land. The fourth land party, under Capt. Alonso de Leon, in 1689, found Fort St. Louis in ruins and a number of dead bodies. It was learned that a few Frenchmen were alive among the Indians of East Texas.

Q. How long after Capt. de Leon found the ruins of Fort St. Louis was it until he led another expedition into Texas?

A. Accompanied by Father Damien Massanet, who was with him when Fort St. Louis was established, de Leon led an expedition in 1690 into East Texas and established the mission near the present town of Crockett, leaving three priests and three soldiers there.

Q. What became known as the "Vasquez Raid" and how did it end?

A. In the winter of 1841-42, Mexican forces numbering about 1400 were assembled below the Rio Grande under Gen. Rafael Vasquez, for a surprise invasion of Texas. A company was quickly organized at San Antonio under Capt. John C. (Jack) Hays to resist the invasion. It started to meet Vasquez, but being far outnumbered, withdrew and Vasquez entered San Antonio, Mar. 6, 1842. In a few days Texas reinforcements reached San Antonio, whereupon Vasquez retreated across the Rio Grande and the Texas volunteers disbanded without a fight.

WASHINGTON—Higher wages for the most exploited, poorly paid classes of labor; shorter hours which would spread work in many industries and control over child labor—these are objectives in perhaps the administration's most important proposal to the special session of Congress.

At the last session the Senate macerated and passed a once-ambitious administration wage-hour bill. The House labor committee made further changes and approved this measure. Then a combination of Republicans and Southern Democrats on the rules committee stifled it. House leaders promised to move to get the bill onto the floor at the next session as promptly as possible.

That's the way it stands now, except that in intervening months a strong, well-financed propaganda campaign has been organized against the bill. The administration takes the attitude that most of the current criticism is designed not to improve the bill, but to kill it.

The House bill provides for a labor standards board which would be empowered to establish maximum hours not lower than 40 a week and minimum wages not higher than 40 cents an hour. These standards would be set only for industries in interstate commerce (with numerous exceptions) industry by industry, and theoretically would be delayed in application where threat of harmful effects existed.

If the administration continues to stand on the House bill, its forces will have to get 218 members' signatures to discharge the measure from the Rules committee, or some of the Democratic and/or Republican Rules members must cave in.

Roosevelt has little organized, articulate support for this bill. Opposed to it are the southern members almost to a man, manufacturers' associations, farm organization lobbyists and the more conservative groups in the A. F. of L. The C. I. O. appears to be for the bill, but has given it no effective support.

Senator George Berry of Tennessee, the millionaire labor leader, offers one of the substitutes, which is said to be backed by such A. F. of L. conservatives as Vice President Matthew Woll, and President Bill Hutchison of the Carpenters' Union. Berry's plan calls for a flat 40-hour maximum week and a minimum wage of 30 cents an hour in all interstate industries. Chief objection raised to this and similar proposals is that the $12 a week minimum wage standard would be regarded as too low in northern industrial areas and too high under certain conditions in some southern areas.

Without the possibility of variation, it is contended, an inflexible standard can't be imposed without forcing many persons out of employment. Furthermore, Berry's bill provides for enforcement by the Department of Justice, whereas experience shows the need of some special body to administer, investigate and at least recommend prosecution. The administration won't take Berry's bill if it can help itself.

FOOTBALL men in general regret Notre Dame's break with Pittsburgh.

Notre Dame has a perfect right to play whoever it pleases. Notre Dame may be stepping up in the Purity League in its desire to be a sort of American Oxford, but the unofficial explanation that Pittsburgh plays too much stress on the game sounds a bit out of place coming from South Bend, where for years they dished it out in large quantities and where you still find more than 200 young huskies on the varsity roster.

The Irish won only one of the last half dozen games from the Panthers. They scored only two touchdowns against them in the same period.

Notre Dame men who long ago came to expect the best football from their opponents do not want to break with an opponent holding such a jump on the Old Gold as Light Blue.

Knute Rockne wouldn't break with a rival boasting such a commanding lead.

Frankly, it appears as though the current football administration at Notre Dame can't take it.

TINY THORNHILL suggests a change in the system of converting points after touchdown.

Stanford's coach contends that all the fun is taken out of the thing the way it is done now. A team makes a touchdown, puts the ball on the two-yard line in front of the posts, snaps it back, and attempts to kick goal.

Thornhill would like to return to the old rules under which, if the ball was downed in the corner of the field after a touchdown, it was straight out and the kick was tried from that angle.

"The extra point meant something then," he explains. "Smart teams phenagled around until they could down the ball right between the posts; thus making the attempt comparatively easy. It would add to the interest and suspense if the ball remained in play in the end zone, until downed."

ALTHOUGH Harvard was nosed out by Army by the margin of a point after touchdown, trained observers suspect that the Crimson will be higher than ever for Yale at Cambridge, Nov. 20.

It was a Harvard team that was as inopportune as it was injury-riddled that sloughed off the game to the Cadets, dissipating marked superiority for three-quarters of the engagement.

But it was cheering to Harvard supporters looking forward to Yale, when even an almost complete team of Crimson substitutes held a distinct advantage over Army.

Four Harvard backs, the mighty Vernon Struck, Chief Boston, Torbert Macdonald, and Bob Burnett watched the game from the press box.

All agreed that it was the best place to watch a game that they ever had seen, and expressed the wish that they could have as good a view of the proceedings when they tackle Yale.

(4 to 6 servings)

Twelve pork sausage links, 2 tablespoons butter, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, 1-4 teaspoon tarragon vinegar, 1-2 teaspoon salt, dash red pepper, 6 poached eggs, parsley. Toast sausages. Brown butter and lemon juice, vinegar, salt and pepper. Stir until well blended. Arrange toasted sausages and poached eggs on hot platter. Four brown butter over eggs. Serve piping hot.

Hominy and Stuffed Apples
Wash, pare and partly core red baking apples (Jonathan or York Imperials or Winesaps are a few of many excellent choices). Through each cavity insert a small sausage. If cavity is not quite large enough cut out slightly with small knife.) Place in baking pan and bake in hot oven (425 degrees F.) about 40 minutes, until apples are done, basting occasionally with sausage fat as it accumulates in pan. In the meantime cook hominy in boiling, salted water until kernels are tender—or use canned hominy. Drain well. Serve hominy in center of platter dressed with melted butter and paprika surrounded by stuffed apples.

Bacon-Cornmeal Waffles
(4 large waffles)

Two eggs, 1 cup milk, 1-3 cup melted shortening, 1-1-2 cups cornmeal, 1-2 cup flour, 3 teaspoons baking powder, 1-2 teaspoon salt, 2 tablespoons sugar, 4 slices uncooked bacon, minced. Beat egg yolks; add milk and melted shortening. Add cornmeal. Sift together flour, baking powder, salt and sugar. Stir into first mixture; mix well; fold in beaten egg whites. Bake in hot waffle iron, sprinkling 2 tablespoons minced bacon over each waffle before closing iron.

Acid Test Reveals Human Shortcomings

One of the most disconcerting things about life is the way it will toss an utterly unexpected challenge in a man's face every now and then. Without the least warning, it can present a situation which, in the twinkling of an eye, will force a man to reveal himself for what he really is and not what he thinks he is.

Consider, for instance, the thing that happened the other day in Mt. Clemens, Mich.

A young mother went into a store to shop, leaving her car parked at the curb with her 4-year-old son in the front seat. The car was parked on an incline, and somehow the brake became loosened; when the woman came out of the store, she saw the car rolling off downhill, headed straight toward a river.

Two young men were standing on the street. She screamed to them for help. They looked blankly at the moving car, said, "What can we do?"

Two other men heard her screams. They made for the river without asking questions, went right into it, and got the frightened 4-year-old out of the car unhurt, at some risk to themselves.

The whole business lasted perhaps half a minute, from start to finish. When that half-minute began, there were four men on the street, all of them, presumably, reasonably well satisfied with themselves. When the half-minute ended, all four of them had been through an acid test. Two of them had flunked pretty badly, and to carry with them the rest of their lives—the uncomfortable knowledge that they were neither as brave nor as energetic as they had supposed they were.

Now the point of this incident is that like most of life's tests, it came so unexpectedly that the people who were being tested had no time to make up their minds what they were going to do.

We could all be brave and noble fellows if we had time to nerve ourselves for the ordeal in advance; to marshal our "better natures," call up our reserves of moral and physical courage, set our teeth and plunge in with due resolution. But life doesn't always give us time to do that. It taps us on the shoulder and says, "Answer, quick now—what sort of bird are you, anyway?" And the answer is out before you know it.

Most of us have a pretty sorry gap between ideals and practice. We know what we ought to be, and we know that we don't come very close to it in daily life; but we tell ourselves that when the emergency comes we will get hold of ourselves and rise to meet it as we should.

Which is where we kid ourselves pretty badly. For life brings us these emergencies without warning, and they are past before we know they have come. And ever after, we have to live with the picture they reveal.

Japan's sole desire, says a Tokio spokesman, is peace in Asia. The peace of the dead?

If a Pilgrim Father Should Drop in on You This Thanksgiving—

Mexico Celebrates Anniversary of One Of Her Larger Revolutions Of 1910

BY WILLIAM H. LANDER United Press Staff Correspondent

MEXICO, D. F., Nov. 22.—Mexico is celebrating today the 27th anniversary of "The Revolution" as President Lazaro Cardenas pushed forward his program to convert the nation into a "democracy of laborers."

Flags fluttered over all public buildings and foreign embassies and legations. It was a general holiday throughout the land, although the principal celebrations will be held Sunday. In Mexico City more than 20,000 athletes will parade Sunday down the wide Paseo de la Reforma, then through the narrow streets in the center of town to the broad Zocalo (main square) where they will exercise before a distinguished audience in the Presidential Palace.

This athletic parade, now an annual event, is one of the most colorful displays that Mexico puts on. Men and women, boys and girls, dressed in every conceivable athletic uniform, parade waving dumb-bells, Indian clubs, tennis rackets, etc., while the crack motorcycle dare-devils perform their thrilling acts and airplanes soar overhead. To add interest and a touch of the "typical" to the parade, a contingent of Indians, comprised of five from each tribe, will march in their native costumes.

Celebration of an athletic—instead of a military—parade is in accordance with the policies of Cardenas (himself a general who now rarely wears his uniform) of stimulating sports and education, and to relegate the military to a secondary position. In this connection, only three weeks ago was the name of the "Department of War and Navy" changed to its present name—"Department of National Defense."

Cardenas, during the three years he has been president, has given new significance and importance to the movement which began 27 years ago. He has firmly proceeded with his efforts to improve the lot of the Indians, who constitute the majority of the 18,000,000 inhabitants of Mexico, and to stimulate the development of the country's rich natural resources by building roads, railroads, irrigation projects, and by modifying the past status of the foreign petroleum companies. In so doing he has antagonized powerful interests; furthermore, a drop in agricultural production in 1937 resulted in a critical increase in the cost of living which more than swept away all the gains which labor had obtained in increased wages—so that the program did not go forward either as fast or as successfully as originally planned. Friend and foe alike, however, gave Cardenas credit for a sincerity of purpose and honesty of administration such as seldom is seen in high circles.

The revolution which started on Nov. 20, 1910—led by Francisco I. Madero in the north and in the south by Aquiles Serdan in Puebla and Emiliano Zapata in rural districts of the state of Morelos—had as its principal aim the overthrow of the dictatorship of General Porfirio Diaz.

In 1910 the motto was "Sufragio Efectivo—No Reeleccion," (meaning Effective Suffrage—

No Re-election). It was aimed to stop the practice of Diaz, who had been president from 1876 to 1880, and then continuously from 1884 to 1911.

The original revolution, in its military phase, triumphed on May 10, 1911, when the border city of Ciudad Juarez (across the river from El Paso, Texas) was taken. Diaz resigned a few days later and left for Paris, while Madero triumphantly entered Mexico City on July 7.

But the liberal democratic program of Mexico as planned by Madero did not become firmly established. General Victoriano Huerta, allegedly with the support of the United States Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson, staged a counter-revolution, and from then on for many years Mexico was torn with bloody internal strife. In the ups and downs of the movement, the United States several times played on. Men and women, boys and girls, dressed in every conceivable athletic uniform, parade waving dumb-bells, Indian clubs, tennis rackets, etc., while the crack motorcycle dare-devils perform their thrilling acts and airplanes soar overhead. To add interest and a touch of the "typical" to the parade, a contingent of Indians, comprised of five from each tribe, will march in their native costumes.

Today, for example, more attention is paid to the Zapata emblem of "Tierra Y. Libertad" (Land and Liberty) than the Madero motto of "Sufragio Efectivo—No Re-election." although these four words are still written down at the termination of every official letter (just over the signature).

Out of the series of uprisings, revolts, "pronunciamientos," and programs, a new thing known as "The Revolution" has arisen, and

Eastland Baptist Training School Is Closed On Sunday

A very fitting and inspirational meeting was held in the First Baptist Church, Eastland, Sunday afternoon at 2:30. This was the final service in the B. T. U. Training School which has been conducted the past week in the churches throughout this Association. Splendid enrollment was reported with near 700 having attended in all of the churches.

J. D. Riddle, educational director of the First Baptist Church of Abilene, was principal speaker for the Sunday afternoon service and in an unusually fine way discussed "Preserving the Results of a Training School." Riddle is doing very effective work in his own church and offered many excellent suggestions for B. T. U. work in any church.

The First Baptist church of this city was represented at this meeting with an attendance of 18 members. A splendid school was conducted in the church here last week with an enrollment of 110. The organization in its entirety was strengthened and new plans are being put into action for additional growth and effectiveness.

Steel Production At New Low Level

NEW YORK, Nov. 22.—Steel Mills are scheduled to operate at 31 per cent capacity this week, the lowest level since Dec. 3, 1934 and the sixth consecutive week in which a decline has been recorded.

It has been dignified with being considered responsible for all advances which Mexico has made since 1910. Many of the forgotten ideals have been revived by Cardenas and incorporated into the Six-Year plan. And Mexicans today, as they celebrate "The Revolution," are proud to point out that it is a movement which occurred many years before either the Russian Revolution or the New Deal in the United States.

CAPE COD 'TURKEY'

Dipping into brown swells that champed hungrily at the frosted strokes of his dory, the Cape Codder crouched to his cold work with wet, streaming lines till a catch of fish had been made. Good cod was his Thanksgiving "turkey." With dull skies sinking heavily upon him and the first ghostly shafts of a nor'easter hissing from a smoky horizon, he would lift his crinkled eyes shoreward, thankful for the fish that meant both food and feast.

Sometimes, it seems, we come by our blessings too easily. We take the gifts a more progressive civilization has brought us with a complacency that robs us of deeper thrills. And the thrills are there, with but a slight exercise of imagination.

The local J. C. Penney store is announcing today, a pre-holiday clean-up, planned in order that everyone might have a chance to get ready for Santa by purchasing earlier and securing a larger assortment of merchandise from which to select purchases.

Included in the pre-holiday clean-up are rag rugs, military caps, blankets, stockings, overcoats, dresses, sheets and many other items that could be purchased now for Christmas.

The public is being invited to visit the Penney store during the pre-holiday clean-up, where many bargains can be secured.

Beware The Cough That Hangs On

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your common cough, chest cold, or bronchial irritation, you can get relief now with Creomulsion. Creomulsion not only contains the soothing elements common to many cough remedies, such as Syrup of White Pine Compound with Tar, and fluid extract of Licorice Root, but it also has fluid extract of Ipecac for its powerful phlegm loosening effect, fluid extract of Cascara for its mild laxative effect, and, most important of all, Beechwood Creosote, perfectly blended with all of these so that it will reach the source of the trouble from the inside. Creomulsion can be taken frequently and continuously by both adults and children with remarkable results.
