Virile Industry Can Solve Our Problems

The present session of Congress is beginning to resemble the meeting of that western frontier debating society, whose president announced that the evening's topic would be "What's this country coming to?" with the high school teacher taking the affirmative and himself the negative.

Which is to say that while Congress is full of talk about what this country may be coming to, it is having a mortally hard time deciding just what the affirmative and negative sides of the issue should be.

There is the matter of the budget, for instance. Congress wants to see government expenditures cut, but the cutting tool has a handle like a red-hot poker. The army and the navy are costing enormous sums, and bid fair to cost more; but with the world in the state it is in, the army and the navy look like first-rate insurance which is worth whatever it may cost.

Then there is relief—a stupendously expensive thing, which must be bitten into pretty materially if we are to get our government costs down to anything resembling normal. But while Congress sidles up to this subject, the Cassandra voices of the conference of mayors ring in its ears, warning that to cut relief will be to invite trouble by the car-load lot.

Mayor LaGuardia of New York says bluntly that relief is going to cost more, not less. The present business recessions, he warns, means increased unemployment; far from tapering off, the relief load is due to increase, and increase materially, in the coming winter.

Mayor LaGuardia is followed by Mayor Harold H. Burton of Cleveland, a conservative Republican. Conservative Burton talks just like Left-Wing LaGuardia, when relief is mentioned.

Cut off the federal relief program, says Mayor Burton, and in Cleveland "100,000 people will be compelled to choose between starvation and lawless search for food."

Other mayors talk in the same vein; and from their remarks one senses that the relief load, onerous though it is, is something that can neither be talked away nor ignored. We still have this enormous undigested mass of unemployed men; humanitarian reasons aside, we cannot, in sheer self-defense, do anything but continue to carry it as long as it exists.

Which seems to indicate, then, that our immediate salvation may not lie in the direction of cutting expenses and slicing into the deficit. We should stop spending scores of millions on relief, but we can't do it while need exists; the need will go on existing until private industry is able to absorb the jobless workers.

So Congress might well think about industry instead of the federal treasury, for a while. It might think about that delicate, tenuous thing called confidence, and how it can be restored; about the proposition that if government can't get business back on its feet, it could try letting business get back unaided—and unhampered. For our problem can be solved, apparently, only in terms of a genuine business revival.

CAST OF CHARACTERS
HERB HARRY—hero, ex-partner.
MISS LANE—heroine, partner.
BOB JONES—Indian, partner of Harry's party.
MELISSA—placemat member of Harry's party.

Yelled too, and between them they made a din of it.
 Voices answered, from far below. The two understood no words, but they were suffused with happiness. Salvation seemed at hand. They were almost hysterical with anticipation now.
 "It's Hades Jones! It's Jones! And Holliman! They must have found an outlet hole below somewhere. They're coming! Oh, Lissa, they've found us! They—"
 She too was talking, jabbering. They called and hallowed, and hugged each other as the lights grew stronger. Help was approaching. They dared not move much, lest they fall over the ledge, but they squirmed in righteous glee.
 The rescue party was slow in approaching. It had been far below, and the lights disappeared frequently as the men moved around rock formations. They flickered, too, Bob saw. He began to wonder. Why in the name of goodness hadn't Hades used one of the lanterns, instead of torches?
 "Hello, HADES! HOLLIMAN!" Bob yelled, when he knew they were within 30 yards or so.
 The lights stopped instantly. No answer came. Progress of the rescuers seemed very strange, then. Bob and Lissa peered at them intently.
 "Hey, what's the matter? Can't you see us?" Bob was impatient.

CHAPTER XVI
 all of man's genius, one great mystery of life has never been partly solved.
 The strange fusion of souls, actual entities in man and when consciousness is declared, mutual and singled with a sudden ecstatic thence in a gentle and show staccato harmony, ever reaching, never reaching an end even accord. It is as old as time, but each man must discover it for himself. Robert Barry found it there when death hovering, when he fully believed that both he and Melissa were losing their minds.

 They had been lost in utter darkness for many hours, perhaps three days. They could not even see now. They had slept peacefully, fitfully. Embracing each other now, in the most sacred of Mrs. Stennis, they remained silent frayed dry still. Seconds passed—cut her knew not how many—suddenly Bob got a grip on himself. He saw himself as a statue, appearing baby afraid of the n of the danger replaced fear. Then of threatened mind took command.

"HEY, I'm not hysterical!" He murmured it to himself, as he held Mary Melissa. "On the contrary, I feel awfully calm."
 He shook his head, as if to clear eyes of the darkness. He had behind him again, which led to down.
 "LISSA!" He almost shrieked "Lissa!"
 She was tense with excitement. But he forced himself to analytical, critical of his own tions. No, this was not hysterical.

"Other lights were ignited then, and the group separated. Bob and Lissa couldn't distinguish the approaching men clearly, but he began to think he saw a half dozen or more forms. Moreover, there was a new and absolutely strange murmur of voices.
 "Bob!" whispered Lissa. "Are you—all right? Do you see what I do? I mean, are we out of our minds? Is this another nightmare after all?"
 "NO! No, I'm sure! But I don't know what. It's not our party, that's certain. Stand still, and watch. HELLO THERE! WHO IS IT? WE NEED HELP."
 Somebody answered immediately, but—in a strange tongue!
 Bob was utterly amazed. He was a linguist. He spoke Spanish, the Mexican dialects of it, not to mention the ordinary Indian languages of southwestern tribes. But this garble was foreign to him. And the men themselves, slowly approaching, were foreign. The whole thing was impossible. It was a scene from some weird, imaginative fairy tale. A bit of

 Q. Who led early expeditions from New Mexico in search of Quivira?
 A. In 1634, Capt. Alonzo de Vaca led a small party of soldiers and Indians from Santa Fe some 300 leagues east, but turned back to avoid hostile Indians. In 1650, Capt. Hernan Martin and Diego de Castillo, under orders from the Governor of New Mexico, with a group of soldiers and Indians, explored the Texas Concho rivers, where they found pearls, but no gold.
 Q. What followed the discovery of pearls on the Concho river in 1650?
 A. The pearls were sent to the viceroy of Mexico and created such interest that in 1654 another expedition of some 30 soldiers and 200 friendly Indians, under command of Major Diego de Guadalupe, was sent to make further explorations of the Concho rivers and fuller reports. These encountered hostile Indians and turned back after a fight in which they captured 200 Indians and many bundles of deer and buffalo hides.

 Q. What Spanish expedition was the first to cross the lower Rio Grande into Texas?
 A. Fernando de Azcue headed a punitive expedition across the lower Rio Grande in 1665 against the Cacaxtle Indians, who had been raiding the country between the Rio Grande and Monterrey. This expedition was for the further purpose of capturing Indians and selling them as laborers in Mexican mines.
 Q. What stories caused Coronado to send Alvarado on a scout from Hawiku to the east?
 A. At Hawiku a Jemez Indian appeared, whom the Spaniards nicknamed Bigotes because of his swaggering manner and long mustache, who related wonderful stories of his country and invited the expedition to visit it. Coronado named Hernando Alvarado to head a scouting party of 20 men, including Fray Juan de Padilla, to visit the country and report. This took Alvarado into Texas as far as the Pecos River.

stage imagery, theatrical and impressive and almost devilish. Bob was breathing hard, and he could feel Lissa trembling.
 "Good Lord!" He mumbled it. "I never knew it would be this way."
 But in the same moment he knew it was real!
 The light was visible. The men were tangible. They were brown men, he could see now, which would most likely make them Indians. But the setting, the utterly fantastic circumstance—it was something to read by a fireside and scoff at, or a bit of trickery from Hollywood, except for the salient fact that the brown people approaching were absolutely alive, and that his own mind was now as clear and alert as he had ever known it to be.

THE strangers spoke repeatedly to him. Some of them, he noted, held weapons; rather well made weapons of natural sticks and stones. They wore scant clothing, mostly loin cloths and a crude sort of sandals. They were muscular men, and they were graceful, but they were not menacing. They tried time and again to communicate with Bob and Melissa, one man especially doing the talking. Bob talked back, in all the dialects he knew, but in vain. Then he motioned for water—and got it.
 Some man had brought a skin container, from which Lissa then Bob drank and asked no questions. Bob forced her to take it swallow at a time, with long waits between, lest she suffer spasms of sickness and pain. Somewhere he had fortunately heard this warning, probably from old Hades.
 They got food, too, a dried meat. It was hard, and unsalted, but it was as ambrosia. Bob then thought to divide the last small piece of chocolate candy with Lissa, but suddenly thrust it at the man who appeared to be leader. The brown man sniffed it, tasted it, ate it then with childish glee. All the brown men had been staring with a consuming curiosity, at white skin, at clothing, at Mary Melissa especially. Finally they signaled to the two to come, heading back down the trail.
 "I suppose we'll awaken after a while, honey," Bob grinned and held her as they walked. "But whatever this is, it's one to write down in the books!"
 She gave no answer. She was too overwhelmed.

 Q. Who led early expeditions from New Mexico in search of Quivira?
 A. In 1634, Capt. Alonzo de Vaca led a small party of soldiers and Indians from Santa Fe some 300 leagues east, but turned back to avoid hostile Indians. In 1650, Capt. Hernan Martin and Diego de Castillo, under orders from the Governor of New Mexico, with a group of soldiers and Indians, explored the Texas Concho rivers, where they found pearls, but no gold.
 Q. What followed the discovery of pearls on the Concho river in 1650?
 A. The pearls were sent to the viceroy of Mexico and created such interest that in 1654 another expedition of some 30 soldiers and 200 friendly Indians, under command of Major Diego de Guadalupe, was sent to make further explorations of the Concho rivers and fuller reports. These encountered hostile Indians and turned back after a fight in which they captured 200 Indians and many bundles of deer and buffalo hides.

 Q. What Spanish expedition was the first to cross the lower Rio Grande into Texas?
 A. Fernando de Azcue headed a punitive expedition across the lower Rio Grande in 1665 against the Cacaxtle Indians, who had been raiding the country between the Rio Grande and Monterrey. This expedition was for the further purpose of capturing Indians and selling them as laborers in Mexican mines.
 Q. What stories caused Coronado to send Alvarado on a scout from Hawiku to the east?
 A. At Hawiku a Jemez Indian appeared, whom the Spaniards nicknamed Bigotes because of his swaggering manner and long mustache, who related wonderful stories of his country and invited the expedition to visit it. Coronado named Hernando Alvarado to head a scouting party of 20 men, including Fray Juan de Padilla, to visit the country and report. This took Alvarado into Texas as far as the Pecos River.

Sport Glances. . . . . By Grayson

BY MAX RIDDLE
NEA Service Staff Writer
 YEAR after year some horse gallops up from the ranks to prove that there really is a Santa Claus. With the Christmas holiday just around the corner, it is only fair to hand Seabiscuit the accolade he so richly deserves.
 In two years, Seabiscuit has paid Charles S. Howard, San Francisco automobile man, a bonus of something like $200,000 on an original investment of $8000.
 This does not compare with the all-time parlay of $332,000, which Phar Lap, the Australian wonder horse, handed David Davis on a $800 investment. Nevertheless, Seabiscuit is back at Tanforan, where he will be sent after the $10,000 Francisco Handicap, after which race he will be shipped to Santa Anita to be prepared for the richest prize of them all, the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap, in February. And he has years of stud duty ahead of him.
 It may be regarded as the veriest misfortune that Seabiscuit did not win the last running of the Santa Anita Handicap. He was beaten in a photo finish by Rosemont, and as later events demonstrated, that probably was the only day of his matured life that Rosemont could have turned that trick.

SEABISCUIT'S story is an amazing one. His sire, Hard Tack, was an extremely fast, if unsound, son of Man o' War. He was a high-class stakes winner, but his opportunity in the stud came only because most sons of the superhorse were being given some chance there.
 But Hard Tack's chance wasn't much at that. The year Seabiscuit came to the races only three others of his blood represented their mutual sire. Seabiscuit and Grog were stakes winners, albeit they carried only a ripple on the pond.
 The Wheatley Stable, over which Sunny Jim Fitzsimmons presides, sold Seabiscuit presumably down the river. The stable had tried running him to death—he was started 35 times as a juvenile—and probably figured that he would fold up in no time.
 Seabiscuit was built for hard work, however. In 1936, when he was 3, he won $29,000, more than $20,000 more than his purchase price, and went into winter quarters as a California phenomenon. This year he has grossed more than $175,000 in 14 starts.

CONSIDER that after 10 starts during the season recently closed he was able to take up 130 pounds and set a new track record for a mile and an eighth in the Massachusetts Handicap. If that wasn't enough to establish his claim, note that he carried 130 pounds in the Riggs at a mile and three-sixteenths, and clipped three-fifths of a second from the track record. Also that while beaten a nose by Esposa in the Bowie Handicap at a mile and five-eighths, he carried 130 pounds, gave the splendid mare 15, and forced her to lower the track record by one and two-fifths seconds.
 There is no denying that Seabiscuit can carry high weights any distance and do it as fast as horses ever ran. He is honest and game. Little more can be asked of a thoroughbred.

Behind the Scenes in Washington

BY BRUCE MITCHELL
NEA Service Staff Correspondent
 WASHINGTON—By no stretch of imagination could this period be called an "era of good feeling" in Washington and one of the ways not to make the chances are that greater bitterness lies in the month ahead.
 In few sessions of Congress have so many names been called during the first couple of weeks. Most of these names are being called behind people's backs and sometimes they're only muttered, but they're dirty ones and seem more and more likely to be hurled ground openly.
 The depression seems to breed exasperation on Capitol Hill, perhaps because no one knows what to do about it. Members find themselves able to act unusually lusty over a farm or wage-hour bill and of course the anti-lynching bill, which always produces bitter, interchanges of personal scorn than any other, has been under debate in the Senate.
 When "the senator from New York" was being accused of snuffing the anti-lynching bill is a vote-getting expedition into the Harlem "black belt," Senator Royal S. Copeland of New York rose to point out that the junior senator from New York, Robert F. Wagner and not Copeland, was neat.
 "The senior senator from New York has already been on a vote-getting expedition," pointed out Senator Sherman Minton of Indiana in what was an especially neat dig, considering the walloping which Copeland took in both the Republican and Democratic majority primaries in New York.
 But the really extraordinary thing about Minton's crack is to be found in the fact that Minton is the Senate's assistant Democratic whip. Actually he is the real whip, since the title of whip is held by the venerable J. Hamer of Illinois.
 (Copyright 1937, NEA Service, Inc.)

One of a whip's jobs—or an assistant whip's—is to go around trying to make everybody happy and one of the ways not to make Senator Copeland happy is to remind him of those primaries. Of course Senator Copeland doesn't make Senator Minton happy, since he is a violently anti-New Deal Democrat. Just the same a whip is a whip.
 One hates to see the ladies of Congress mixing into anything that suggests a personal squabble, since it is always to be hoped that they will be angels of sweetness and light in a sordid political world.
 There was much suppressed excitement when Senator Dixie Graves of Alabama jumped into the anti-lynching debate, because of the rough fighting that had been going on there, but Mrs. Graves used no fighting words and her delivery was so good that many listeners commented on it.
 Nevertheless, it does seem to be too bad about Congresswoman Virginia E. Jenckes of Indiana and Congresswoman Nan Lee Honeyman of Oregon. Mrs. Honeyman seems to stand guilty of giving Mrs. Jenckes and one of her pet ideas the razz.
 Congresswoman Jenckes has just started a one-woman campaign for uprooting the famous Japanese cherry trees around Washington's Tidal Basin and burning them up as firewood. Mrs. Jenckes doesn't think much of Japan.
 But Congresswoman Honeyman, who lives much nearer Japan than Mrs. Jenckes, seemed to just about put the kibosh on her Indians sister's idea when asked for comment. She said tearing up those cherry trees would be just like slashing an old painting by one of the Italian masters just because of a dislike of Mussolini.

OAK GROVE FRECKLES and HIS FRIENDS - By Blosser

The recent stormy weather found a few of the farmers in this community with some late feed in the field, but most of them had completed their harvesting and most of the crop is in a fine condition. The supply also is fairly good. Farmers will not buy as much feed in 1938 as they did in 1937, is the opinion of most of them.
 The big snow last week and the heavy rains this week have put as fine plowing season in the land as we have had at this time of the year in many seasons. It bids fair to last most of the winter.
 Mrs. Eva M. Bradford of Olympia, Wash., who has been visiting her cousin, Mrs. J. E. Cannaday, for some time, left here on last Tuesday for Yuma, Ariz., where she will visit friends a few days before going to California for the winter.
 Joe and Oscar Petree, Lon Reed, Buster Walker and Jim and I. D. Hogan are among those who went west to help gather the large cotton crop. All have returned except Buster Walker, and report the business is fine.
 Volney Williams and his father, J. R. Williams, are in New Mexico sawing lumber.
 Mr. Eugene Finley of Breckenridge and his sisters, Miss Jonnie Mae of Abilene and Mrs. Ola Lowe of San Angelo have been here some time repairing the farm buildings, and will have two tenants on their farm next year in the place of one. We welcome all newcomers.
 Mr. and Mrs. Johnnie Hastings of Roscoe, Nolan county, visited relatives here a few days of this week.
 Mr. and Mrs. Garner Kinard of Eastland were visitors in the home of Troy B. and Mrs. Cannaday on last Tuesday.
 Mrs. Maud Pierce of Breckenridge is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. Y. Reed of this place.
 Mrs. J. E. Cannaday is on the sick list.
 San Francisco vetoed a subway and an anti-picketing proposal. If westerners must be pushed around they prefer it in the wider-open spaces.

ANCIENT astronomers could see little of the southern hemisphere, and the southern heavens were left blank on their sky maps. Due to the wobbling of the earth on its axis, some stars that were visible to the ancients of southern Europe cannot be seen from that part of the earth today.

NOTE BOOK

Visitors at the home of Mrs. A. W. Huffman over the week-end were Mr. and Mrs. Hoyt Russell and Harold Russell of Los Angeles, Calif.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. McKinney of Cisco visited Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Simmons Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Ambrose are home after a week's visit to San Antonio, where a meeting of the Southern Ice company was held and attended by a host of delegates. A visit was made to Monterrey, a feature of the program's entertainment.

Prof. and Mrs. T. E. Reynolds and daughter of Fort Worth returned to their home today after a week-end visit in Ranger as the special guests of the First Baptist church and Rev. and Mrs. Charles T. Tally, Jr.

Mrs. J. H. Crabb of San Diego, Calif., continues her visit in Ranger and has been entertained informally. One of the courtesies of the week past was the party given by Mrs. W. O. Cox, Mrs. W. T. Hager and Mrs. J. L. Shaw at the home of the former hostess.

Airmail Survey Plane Lands In Ranger Sunday

An airplane, bearing L. Fimian, director of the Eastern Airways, and Capt. B. Roe, landed in Ranger Sunday at 11 a. m. on its survey of this part of the country in connection with the air mail feeder survey. The plane came somewhat unexpectedly, as word was received only an hour before its arrival that it would be in Ranger. A mail plane will land in Ranger, Friday, Dec. 10, at 9 a. m., for the purpose of picking up air mail from Ranger during the week of the survey, which started today.

Mrs. Martha Davenport, postmaster of Ranger, today urged everyone who wanted to send air mail letters on the plane to have their letters in the post office by Wednesday, Dec. 9, and they would be stamped with a special cachet that has been obtained for that purpose. Already letters have been received from several states asking that the letters be stamped with the first air mail cachet out of Ranger, it was stated today. The official welcome committee for the survey plane which landed in Ranger Sunday, consisted of Mrs. Davenport, J. J. Kelly, Calvin Brown, J. E. Meroney, L. H. Flewelling, E. E. Crawford and Mrs. Mollie Gholson, it was stated today.

Committees have been named to welcome the airmail plane when it arrives in Ranger, Friday.

Oil Development In South Texas Has Had Big Spurt

CORPUS CHRISTI. — Development of the oil industry in the vast South Texas mineral resource empire has gone forward by leaps and bounds during the past two and one-half years.

Less than three years ago when Corpus Christi advanced the claim that here was "the Oil Capital of South Texas," the statement was made that the region generally was "in the early exploration stage." At that time (April, 1935) there were 57 oil fields in the territory Corpus Christi felt it could serve most adequately. In the 57 fields, most of them within 100 miles of this city, there were 2,353 wells, with an allowable production of 61,581 barrels of oil per day.

Today the area has 7,033 wells ranging in depth from 150 feet to over 8,000 feet. The producing wells, distributed over 126 fields, are flowing 211,565 barrels of oil per day, or a grand total of 77,221,125 barrels a year. Persons familiar with the oil industry know, of course, that the potential of the area is substantially greater than the amount allowed.

Nueces county, Corpus Christi's home county, today has 15 fields containing 893 wells, with a daily production of 53,781 barrels of oil. It is the leading producer of the area, which many believe is still in an early exploration stage.

Oil has been a prime factor in making Corpus Christi the fastest-growing city in the nation. Today's population is conservatively estimated at 55,000, an increase of approximately 100 per cent over the number given by the 1930 federal census. Although growth has been consistently rapid since 1926—the year the Port of Corpus Christi was opened—the last two years have been the most accelerated in the city's history. In 1936, for instance, building permits in the city and its immediate suburbs totaled about $4,000,000, fairly equally divided among commercial and residence structures. Over 900 homes were erected that year. Activity has continued strong through 1937, figures compiled Dec. 1 showing that permits issued thus far exceed last year's figure.

The meeting closing on Wednesday night.

The attendance has increased each night, it was stated today, and a cordial invitation is extended to the public to attend.

Safety Association Executives to Meet

HOUSTON, Texas.—With approximately 5000 men, women and children being victims of fatal accidents in Texas each year, the Texas Safety Executive Association today issued to safety engineers, and all persons interested in furthering the promotion of accident prevention, an invitation to attend the T. S. E. A. organization meeting at the Driskill Hotel in Austin next Friday (Dec. 3).

Invitations were extended particularly to executives of insurance companies, public utilities, truck operators, oil executives, representatives of industrial concerns and others to attend the one-day session, which will be addressed by outstanding leaders in the field of safety.

Dr. T. O. Walton, President of Texas A. & M. College, will be the principal speaker and safety experts are expected to attend from all parts of the state. Because of the seriousness of the safety problem, a large attendance was urged by B. B. Hooper, chairman of the T. S. E. A. committee on temporary organization.

The temporary committee will be disbanded and a permanent organization set up during the meeting, which will continue throughout the day. Officers will be elected and a vast volume of business will be attended to, Chairman Hooper said.

The final regional meeting was

I AM AN ADVERTISING MAN

For over thirty years I have been writing advertisements for national advertisers — shoes, soap, cereals, automobiles, radios, tobacco, blankets, tooth powder.

To me it is the most fascinating work in the world — learning about the merits of merchandise and then telling people about them — bringing greater comfort, and enjoyment, into people's lives — introducing people to new pleasures, helping them to get the most for their money.

Besides being fascinating, it is satisfying! My intimate experience with advertisers has shown me that, except for rare exceptions, the manufacturers and merchants of this nation lean over backwards to be sincere and honest.

The law of advertising is simple once one understands its working — the more people know about the merit of a product, the more people buy it. The greater the volume of sales, the less the cost to manufacture. Savings in making mean either lower prices to the consumer or greater value put back into the merchandise.

As an advertising man I can sincerely affirm that it pays to read the advertisements in the newspapers — for news of new things, for bargains and savings.

There are thousands of other men — and women — devoting their lives to advertising writing, who will tell you the same thing. THEY KNOW!
