Dollar Devaluation— a Good or Bad Thing?

It is now almost four years since the dollar was devalued.

And today the effect of that epoch-making shift of monetary policy is lost in the welter of national and international factors that bear on the relation between the things bought and the money paid for them.

Yet four years ago the nation gasped at the daring of the step. The more conservative shuddered at what they felt sure was a gate opening directly on inflation that would destroy us all.

Even the most radically-minded among financial authorities took a firm grip on the handles and prepared for some kind of a fast sleigh-ride when the price of gold was artificially advanced so that the 100-cent dollar became a 59-cent dollar in relation to the price of gold.

Something is gone, all right, but nobody seems to know quite what it is. Prices did rise, steadily, until last fall, when they began to slip, and have been slipping ever since.

The effect of devaluation on the pocketbook of the average man is even harder to measure. He still goes to the store with paper dollars, and buys with them about what he did before.

It is quite likely, however, that there has been a definite effect on foreign trade. Devaluation placed the American dollar in a workable relationship with foreign moneys.

Gold continues to pile up in the federal vaults under the standing offer to purchase at an artificially-high fixed price. Many economists believe this is a danger, and that the rest of the world may suddenly give up gold as a monetary measure.

Dollar devaluation and its history thus far prove nothing at all except that we once took what we thought was a daring step, and that its results four years later were neither the heaven promised by its advocates nor the hell forecast by its opponents.

'NOW, ABOUT WAGE CUTS AND PRICE BOOSTS'

Mind Training is Urged as An Aid To Spastic Child

By ROBERT L. SPENCER United Press Staff Correspondent SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 25.—Spastic paralysis, muscular disorder which afflicts children, can be cured if given proper treatment at an early age, in the opinion of hood, Dr. Carlson's physical coordination was impaired at birth by a brain hemorrhage. He overcame the paralysis, educated himself and now devotes his life to the motor disorders of children.

Dr. Earl Carlson, noted specialist in spastic disorders and member of the Neurological Institute of Columbia University. Mental exercise in treatment of this paralysis, he said, was as important as physical exercise.

Mann Is Candidate For Attorney General

AUSTIN, Texas, Feb. 5.—Former Secretary of State Gerald C. Mann of Dallas today became an active contender for the office of Attorney General of Texas.

Bidding for the State's highest and most important post next to the governorship, Mann definitely announced, in a statement issued here, his candidacy in next summer's Democratic primaries.

His brief announcement was colored with a declaration of war against political racketeering which, he said, has become a disgrace to the State.

"I have never before asked the people of Texas for any office," his statement said. "I have been too busy practicing law and studying the fundamental defects of our state government to run for office."

"Often the children are laboring under purely motor handicaps," he continued, "with little or no mental disturbance, and have a possibility of extremely good recovery if given proper treatment at an early age."

Dr. Carlson proposed establishment of schools which, in addition to teaching these children suffering from paralysis, muscular coordination, would also enable them to gratify their desire for personal worth by individual development.

The answer to the present problem of hundreds of spastic children in the United States, he believes, rests in proper use of physical and mental training so that the development of the child will be well rounded.

"By compensating for his affliction with the development of the unimpaired areas of the brain," Dr. Carlson said, "the spastic loses his fear, increases manual control and becomes a useful citizen."

Pointing out that there were adequate facilities in all the large cities for careful diagnosis and treatment of the spastic, Dr. Carlson said a cure could not be obtained by prescriptions filled at "the corner drug store."

"A spastic school, with simultaneous physical and mental training, is the only answer," he said. Dr. Carlson directs the training of thousands of spastics in the Presbyterian Medical center in New York where he puts his theories into practice daily.

When a machine is well oiled, it makes the least noise with humans, it's just the opposite.

Army Engineers Move Entire Village To Make Way for Ohio Flood Dam

SANDYVILLE, O.—Sandyville, once a snug little village near Sandy creek, has been moved a half mile to a new site so that flood-fearing towns along the Muskingum river will be safe from future high waters.

Sandyville homes were moved—attics, cellars and everything—not because the citizenry of 275 did not like the 123-year-old back-ground, but because U. S. Army engineers needed a nearby plot to build a dam to lessen flood dangers.

The dam, the engineers told the townfolk, would have to be built there to hold back water in Sandy creek, which is a tributary to the Tuscarawas river, which in turn is one of the main tributaries of the Muskingum.

It is the Muskingum which cuts capers when snow melts and rains begin. When the gates of the dam were closed, they said, water would back up into Sandyville, inundating the lower sections.

The government provided the new site on an adjoining farm, and the villagers, looking longingly at shade trees their fathers planted 100 years ago, began their strange exodus.

The new village is laid out in accordance with modern village planning. It is subdivided into 83 lots. Each person was permitted to choose his own lot for his home. Thirty dwellings moved thus far surround a commons, where a town hall, post office and stores are located. A park-play ground also is under construction.

An eight-inch sewer was laid in the main street, with six-inch lateral lines to each dwelling. Each house has a gravelled driveway and septic tanks were replaced.

All lawns will be graded and seeded and shrubbery will be moved. Each property will have individual wells.

The moving was done by the U. S. Army under the supervision of K. F. Adair, superintendent of engineers.

"People didn't catch the spirit of good will to neighbors down the river banks in a minute," Adair said. "But the town moved—it had to, or sink."

"The people went over to the neighbors on the days the houses were moved. By night a house would be at home and no one had to sleep out in the whole procedure."

"When the restaurant was moved, the owner stayed inside and cooked as it went. It was stopped at noon while she served meals."

The relocation of Sandyville, nearly completed, began Aug. 25. Two churches, the school building and the garage hall will remain on the old site because they are on high ground.

MEMPHIS SOLVES THE PROBLEM OF ECONOMICAL HOME BUILDING

For $2340 a home can be built in Memphis, in either of the two designs above—or in a great variety of other designs. At the left is the modern plan English home and at right a variation to the Colonial type. The floor plan of each home is identical. Widely divergent elevation styles are possible with only a slight shifting of porch and chimneys.

Well-Built Houses Cost as Little as $2340 and Cheating Is Eliminated

BY ALFRED C. ANDERSSON NEA Service Special Correspondent

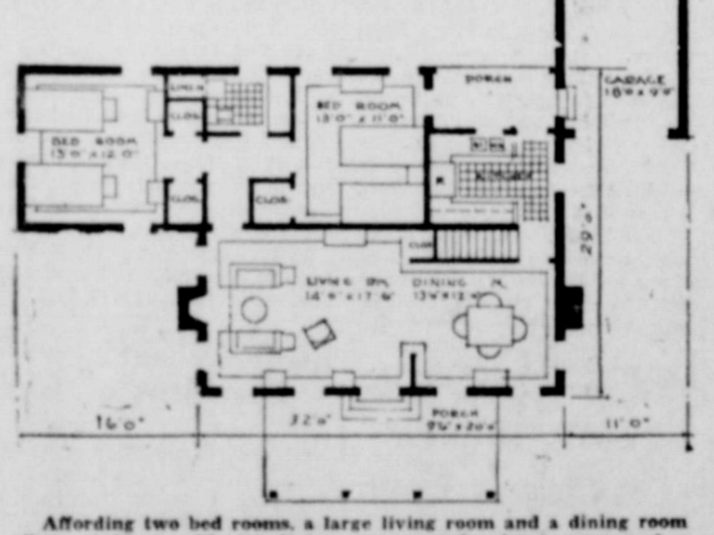

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Would you like a new five-room home for $2,340?

You can get one in Memphis, because cut-throat and haphazard conditions in the local building industry have been remedied by a non-profit, cooperative organization known as the Memphis Small House Construction Bureau.

For years small house construction here was a sorry business. The architect, getting from 3 to 10 per cent for his work, was too expensive for the little man.

The contractor, bidding against cut-throat competition, often was forced to substitute and cheat to come out ahead. The owner, having no architect, often tried to plan his own home, with little success.

The supply men faced a serious situation, too, with unscrupulous contractors using green lumber that popped off the plaster, stretched the floors and stuck the windows.

Affording two bed rooms, a large living room and a dining room that combines with the living room, ample closet space and a garage attached to the home, this is the basic floor plan for the $2340 Memphis contract-built home.

gave bankers came in at last to protect their investments and out of the whole affair came the Memphis Small Home Construction Bureau.

Supposing you want to build a home in Memphis. You go to a member of the bureau, who may be a building supply dealer or a mortgage banker.

He shows you an attractive book containing architectural plans for a series of houses ranging in price from $2340 to $4000. There are about 50 plans in all, which can be varied to produce an almost unlimited number of designs.

Idea Is Copyrighted but Other Cities Can Use It Under Strict Agreements

sign a check chart as a registered architect and over his official seal. He has authority to stop the job if the contractor fails to meet specifications.

Using the standard contract form of the American Institute of Architects, the architect checks for lot plan, test of soil and drainage, location on lot, excavations, plumbing, tree stumps, bracing, joist level, lumber, general progress and general workmanship.

Everyone Safeguarded WHEN the house is finally approved you get a certificate. You are assured the house you wanted, the mortgage company is protected and the architect has safeguarded his reputation.

The bureau itself has no paid secretary or central office. Individual members subscribed sufficient money to build two demonstration houses under the bureau name. Several more of the houses have been started by private capital and negotiations are under way for more.

The bureau's idea of home service is copyrighted and is available to any city which will carry out the service without alteration or omission of any phase.

No Geologist Is Hired By State Land Office Now

By Gordon K. Shearer
United Press Staff Correspondent
AUSTIN, Texas.—The State of Texas owns some of the most valuable oil land in the world but it has no geologist employed in its land office. No appropriation was made for a geologist nor for a petroleum engineer. It has no surveyor.

These are some of the "horse and buggy" conditions that were revealed by a State Senate committee's investigation into state land leasing.

Alert Senators were astonished at the conditions, but they shied themselves at science.

The word "logarithm" scared Senator T. J. Holbrook of Galveston. Sen. Joe Hill pretended that he couldn't pronounce it. Holbrook expressed astonishment that Land Commissioner William H. McDonald would accept report of computers in his office that a logarithm bid was the high offer on an oil lease.

McDonald passed an attempt to explain logarithms to his computers. The bids were computed on a formula that took into consideration many variable factors. Complexity of the bid was due to the conditions covered. Principal factors were the size of the well that might be brought in, the amount of oil it would be allowed to produce under state proration orders, and the market price of oil.

Use of logarithm bids did not seem to be common in the oil industry. One operator explained that it was difficult to get land owners to adopt it. Like Senators, they were "leery" of its mathematical indices.

Another admitted he could not explain a logarithm bid, but that he understood the result. "I can't explain the prescriptions a doctor writes," he added, "but when I am sick I don't refuse to take the medicine for that reason. The planet Neptune was discovered by logarithms, and I don't doubt it's there."

Gov. James V. Allred recently opposed logarithmic bids because a layman cannot understand them. Whether a bid is in logarithmic form or calls for overriding royalties that are not variable, he opposes the leases if any considerable cash bonus is turned down in favor of prospective oil return.

Lack of a well considered state land policy is apparent outside the land office. Besides the land office there are four distinctive boards for leasing land: The University of Texas has its leasing board and leases its land through public auction. There is a board for leasing of riverbeds. It is not authorized to conduct auctions. It has accepted both logarithmic and fixed royalty leases. Reduction of its Sabine River contracts became necessary (or the legislature was so convinced) when oil proration limited the production. That caused attention to be turned to logarithmic bids which include proration as a factor. Another board leases state prison land. A separate board leased the National Guard encampment site at Palacios.

Each of the boards and the land office guesses at what the state has in prospect under the areas leased. Usually they form their judgment on the proximity of proven oil territory. The University permits prospective bidders to go on the land and make geophysical or other tests before bidding. A serious attack of procrastination seems to be the only excuse for the lack of accurate surveys and geological records.

Land Commissioner McDonald said that, in making awards, the department depends upon information it can obtain from the state railroad commission and upon maps and geological reports of oil companies. Two representatives of a leading oil company, whom McDonald named as supplying data recently, are reported to be with that firm no longer.

New Pontiacs Have Simple Gear Shift At a Nominal Cost

"The newest thing in 1938 cars" is being advertised today by C. P. Simmons, manager of the Simmons Motor company, Pontiac dealer for Ranger.

The new safety shift, whereby gears are shifted by a small lever immediately under the steering wheel, and with finger-tip control, is available on Pontiac cars at a remarkably low price, much cheaper than in other automobiles.

The gear shift is entirely mechanical, there is nothing new to learn and nothing to jam or get out of order, and it is so simple that one can become an expert in five minutes, are the claims made for the new gear shift, which is said to double driving ease.

Frigidaire Dealers See Bigger Year Ahead During 1938

Based on the premise that 1938 will reward fighters and that 1937 will see electrical appliance sales as close to normal as any product, a national selling campaign involving more than 20,000 men was launched by executives of Frigidaire division of General Motors at a recent meeting attended by Floyd Killingsworth, dealer here for Frigidaire, and members of his organization.

At the convention, sales and advertising plans covering the two major Frigidaire lines—electric refrigerators and electric ranges—were presented.

The convention was conducted by a group of executives from Frigidaire headquarters at Dayton, Ohio. The men travel in two special sleeping cars and carry three trunks each filled with charts, a portable revolving stage, sound motion picture projection equipment, stage-high copies of newspaper and magazine advertising pages and other properties needed in the various talks, dramatized skits and other parts of the convention program.

"The Frigidaire organization has just entered the most successful year in its history," Killingsworth said.

"In 1938, we enter two appliance markets with two completely new lines of products—refrigerators and the new Frigidaire electric range, now being shown for the first time. Both are the result of years of engineering laboratory research and operating experience of thousands of American housewives.

"Because 1938 will find buyers making purchases carefully and after studying overall cost and operating and maintenance expense, Frigidaire is confident of a 1938 volume that will compare favorably with its 1937 record accomplishment. Our 1938 models of both refrigerators and ranges provide more economical operation than ever before true in either of the appliance fields represented.

"This factor—economy of operation—plus pricing schedules that nowhere near represent the increased costs of materials and labor, means that purchasers will get more for their expenditures than ever before."

No Geologist Is Hired By State Land Office Now

AUSTIN, Texas—The State of Texas owns some of the most valuable oil land in the world but it has no geologist employed in its land office. No appropriation was made for a geologist nor for a petroleum engineer. It has no surveyor.

These are some of the "horse and buggy" conditions that were revealed by a State Senate committee's investigation into state land leasing.

Alert Senators were astonished at the conditions, but they shied themselves at science.

The word "logarithm" scared Senator T. J. Holbrook of Galveston. Sen. Joe Hill pretended that he couldn't pronounce it. Holbrook expressed astonishment that Land Commissioner William H. McDonald would accept report of computers in his office that a logarithm bid was the high offer on an oil lease.

McDonald passed an attempt to explain logarithms to his computers. The bids were computed on a formula that took into consideration many variable factors. Complexity of the bid was due to the conditions covered. Principal factors were the size of the well that might be brought in, the amount of oil it would be allowed to produce under state proration orders, and the market price of oil. Dollar oil and an allowable well production of 100 barrels a day was used as the standard for the gulf coast area estimates.

Use of logarithm bids did not seem to be common in the oil industry. One operator explained that it was difficult to get land owners to adopt it. Like Senators, they were "leery" of its mathematical indices.

Another admitted he could not explain a logarithm bid, but that he understood the result: "I can't explain the prescriptions a doctor writes," he added, "but when I am sick I don't refuse to take the medicine for that reason. The planet Neptune was discovered by logarithms, and I don't doubt it's there."

Gov. James V. Allred recently opposed logarithm bids because a layman cannot understand them. Whether a bid is in logarithmic form or calls for overriding royalties that are not variable, he opposes the leases if any considerable cash bonus is turned down in favor of prospective oil return. The oil is more valuable as a reserve than as a speculative development, he believes.

Lack of a well considered state land policy is apparent outside the land office. Besides the land office there are four distinctive boards for leasing land. The University of Texas has its leasing board and leases its land through public auction. There is a board for leasing of riverbeds. It is not authorized to conduct auctions. It has accepted both logarithmic and fixed royalty leases. Reduction of its Sabine River contracts became necessary (or the legislature was so convinced) when oil proration limited the production. That caused attention to be turned to logarithmic bids which include proration as a factor. Another board leases state prison land. A separate board leased the National Guard encampment site at Palacios.

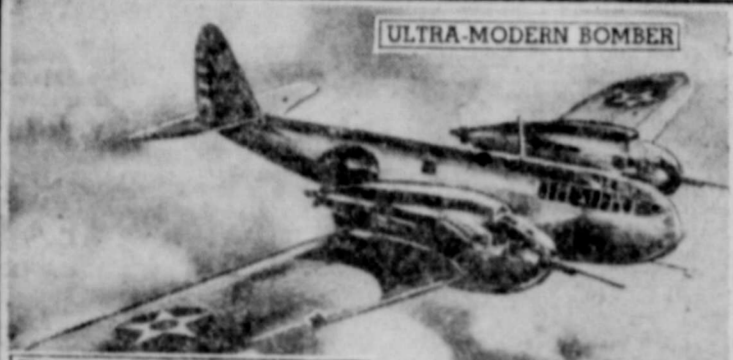

Each of the boards and the land office guesses at what the state has in prospect under the areas leased. Usually they form their judgment on the proximity of proven oil territory. The University permits prospective bidders to go on the land and make geological and geophysical surveys and geological reports.

Land Commissioner McDonald said that, in making upon information it can obtain from the state railroad commission and upon maps and geological reports of oil companies. Two representatives of a leading oil company, whom McDonald named as supplying data recently, are reported to be with that firm no longer.

CHAPTER IV

JERRY WHITEFIELD, who had sworn to his New England mother that he would not drink strong liquor, sat in the Unicorn and Crown Tavern trying to drown his troubles in a mug of ale. Those troubles were as follows: he was caught on the wrong side of the Atlantic when America was going to war; and he had seen for a moment and lost again in the fog a tall brown-haired Yankee girl who had appealed to him with a cry of "help."

He looked up to see old Chet Wheeler beckoning to him furtively from the doorway of the inn. He got up and followed Chet outside.

"Get your clothes together in a hurry, lad!" the old sailor whispered hoarsely. "We're going to Dover by coach. Down at the wharves I scraped acquaintance with a Scotch smuggler, half French, that says he'll take us across the Channel. He's got a fishing craft called the Sea Serpent that works out of a cove beween Dover and Deal and he puts in at a fishing town near Calais. He calls himself John McGowan or Jean Cladin, according to where he's standing."

"Well, now..." Jerry demurred.

"It was then that the girl came toward them. She was walking rapidly and her eyes were fixed on the sign of the Unicorn and Crown. In her arms she carried a little mongrel dog."

Jerry went toward her, and when she saw him she stopped in her tracks. Her face lighted in a way to quicken his pulse. "Oh!" she said. "It's you! I can't tell you how glad I am!"

"You mean you were looking for me?"

"Yes. I had to find you again. I'm Polly Chelsey from Connecticut and I've just run away from old Mr. Dart's house in Hemgill Street because he hates Americans. He's my great-uncle, but he doesn't claim me. Do you remember seeing me this morning?"

"Yes! I looked for you after you ran away, but not a trace. My name's Jerry Whitefield."

"I know. I heard him call you that." She inclined her head toward Wheeler who was making elaborate pretense of studying the sky.

Jerry asked, "Are you the daughter to Trepid Chelsey who lost the brig Proud Lyme off Nantucket a few years back?"

"Yes. That's my father."

"Then you're my cousin, Polly Chelsey—far distant, I mean." Jerry added hastily while his eyes paid ardent homage. "My mother's got Chelsey blood. We live in Massachusetts, Newburyport."

Chet Wheeler cleared his throat, and Jerry made the introductions, after which old Chet said pointedly: "We're just leaving London, Miss. Jerry and me. We're taking coach for Dover."

"Oh-h-h," said Polly in a small forlorn voice.

"Can she go with us?" Jerry asked Chet.

"No! I had to fight for two passages as it was. Get to France yourself, lad. Then send for her."

Jerry looked hard at Chet Wheeler. "I'll not leave her stranded here," he said. The two seamen understood each other as well as if they had argued for hours. Jerry Whitefield would stay on, knowing that every hour that passed made more precarious the life of an American sailor in London. They shook hands and parted, old Chet looking as sour as if he picked in brine.

JERRY took Polly into the tavern where he was able to engage a small room overlooking the stable yard. He explained to the inn keeper, Mr. Toby: "I will use that room. My cousin here, Miss Polly Chelsey, will take my former room. Send up fresh linen and have the room cleaned for her. We'll have our supper there for privacy, if you can serve us. Miss Chelsey has a little dog with her. He'll want bones."

Soon they were together in the room that had been Jerry's. Polly was helping the porter lay out the supper.

Polly was impressed. "Have you learned all this from the English?" she wanted to know. "I ought to have on my low-neck muslin dress and my dancing slippers, ready to step off a minute!"

"You ought to be just the way you are," Jerry answered. Somehow the words carried the meaning he wanted to convey. He was an inarticulate New Englander, in love for the first time in his 23 years of sober living, and he was a little dizzy from it. "Tell me about old Mr. Dart now," he suggested.

Polly told him, and he listened thoughtfully. After that he told her about himself, and how he had become stranded in London. "We are both in some danger here," he said simply, "but things will be all right. I'll take care of you, Polly, and get you home to your father if it's the last thing I ever do."

POLLY said, "You'll never know how I felt when I realized I'd walked up to a perfectly strange young man and put my hand on his sleeve and spoken to him!"

Jerry said in return, "And you'll never know how I felt when I found you were gone!"

There was a stilled silence which Polly hastened to break by calling Nuisance to her and telling the story of his life, so far as she knew it, to her distant cousin from Massachusetts. "Don't you think he's got points?" she wanted to know.

"None that I can see," Jerry answered. "But I reckon he'd die for you if he was put to it—Polly, do you think a man could fall in love just like falling off a cliff, without working up to it?"

"I think," replied Polly, striving to be sensible and clear-headed. "that we've got to do that sort of thing when we're far away from home, and lost like. I'll try to remember that, and I'll thank you to do the same.—Do you think we ought to hold hands like this, for no reason at all?"

"Yes," Jerry Whitefield said huskily. "Yes."

At that moment a street musician struck up a tune on a flute, very sweet. Polly ran to the casement window and threw it wide while she leaned periously out. Jerry crossed the room and stood beside her.

Darkness had fallen. It was enchanting to Polly. Outside were the noises of London—the sounds of a strange hostile city settling to rest, and the sweet minor notes of the flute that seemed to pipe of love and danger. Within was candle light and a table set for two, and Jerry's arm around her. For he had put it there, and she had let it stay. . . . And when she turned from the window it was inevitable that she should find her face near to his, and his arm yet closer around her. Her arm crept around his neck, and when he kissed her, she answered the kiss shyly, experimentally. . . . Presently she drew away from him and whispered, "What must you think of me, Jerry Whitefield?" She put her hands against her burning cheeks, looking at him in wide-eyed consternation. "I've seen you only twice. Both times I've thrown myself at you. And now I've let you kiss me in a tavern room, like a wanton."

"Hush, Polly!" he said, holding her to him. "I can't bear it if you berate yourself. Will you marry me tomorrow."

other countries, even including Mexico, that would be decidedly detrimental to United States business interests.

Q. Did Austin live long enough to know of Jackson's message to Congress favoring delay of Texas recognition?

A. Austin died Dec. 27, 1836, without knowing Jackson's official attitude, as announced in a congressional message, which was regarded by most Texans as "cold-blooded" and "ungenerous." He had a positive conviction, though, that recognition would soon be attained, if it had not already been obtained. It is related that just before his death, he said, in awaking from a dream: "Texas recognized, Archer just told me so. Did you see it in the papers?"

Q. What persons and in what order served as cabinet members in Houston's first administration?

A. In the order named: Stephen F. Austin, R. A. Irion, J. Pinckney Henderson, secretary of state; Thomas J. Rusk, William S. Fisher, Bernard E. Bee, George W. Hockley, secretaries of war;

Henry Smith, secretary of the treasury; S. Rhodes Fisher, William M. Shepperd, secretaries of the navy; J. Pinckney Henderson, Peter W. Grayson, John Birdsall, A. S. Thurston, attorneys general; Robert Carr, postmaster-general; E. M. Pease, Francis R. Lubbock, comptrollers; John W. Wood, J. G. Welshinger, auditors; William G. Cooke, stock commissioner.

Q. Who represented the Republic as ministers to foreign countries in the first Houston administration?

A. William H. Wharton, Mexican; Hunt, Anson Jones, ministers to the United States; J. Pinckney Henderson, minister to Great Britain and France.

Q. What features of the Tyler annexation proposal of 1844 were so objectionable to Texas that it likely would have been rejected by the Republic?

A. Texas was to be annexed as a territory, not as a state; the United States was to have control of all public lands in Texas and assume the debts of the Texas government.

CHALLENGING THE SOCIAL ORDER

By WM. E. GILROY, D. D.

NO great teacher or prophet can emphasize the truth concerning goodness of character and rightness of human relationships and of man's dealing with man without coming quickly into conflict with those who are out to serve their own interests, regardless of considerations of goodness and justice. It was not long until Jesus in His earthly mission and teaching came very directly into conflict with false characters, attitudes, and customs. Our lesson tells us how Jesus, as He passed by, saw Levi, the son of Alphaeus, sitting at the place of toll. He invited Levi to follow Him, and Levi left his job to become His disciple.

When He came into Levi's house and was being entertained there, many publicans and sinners sat down with Jesus and the disciples. The scribes and Pharisees, who were the conventionally religious people of the day, did not like this. They had the common notion that a man is known by the company he keeps. They could not perceive the motive and purpose of a good man in mingling with publicans and sinners that he might bring to them the truth and invite them to a new way of life.

They were very critical of Jesus, and asked: "How is it that He eateth and drinketh with publicans and sinners?" The reply of Jesus, when He heard it, was very wise and pointed: "They that are whole have no need of a physician, but they that are sick; I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners, to repentance." "He did not see these with whom He had sat down as men from whom He did not apologize for the evil in their lives. But He did emphasize the purity of His own motives and His purpose.

QUESTIONS immediately arose, also, about the formal observance of certain customs. There was the custom of fasting, which has been commended and practiced as a religious discipline. Jesus saw men emphasizing simply the custom without regard to its spiritual value. Those who laid such emphasis upon fasting were critical and censorious of those who did not. Jesus did not approve of that spirit.

In the figure of a piece of cloth sewn into an old garment, or of new wine put into old wine-skins, He drew the lesson that the new life could not be altogether merged with the old. There is a point where the whole must be strengthened and made new, unless the rottenness of the old is to destroy the new.

Jesus in one sense was not bringing to men new truth. He was emphasizing and bringing into newness of life the old principles of love to God and love to man. He was interpreting the law and the Jewish religion in terms of love and righteousness, and He was re-emphasizing the truth concerning human conduct with a message concerning God Himself.

He called upon man to be perfect, even as their Father in Heaven was perfect. He associated the grace of God with salvation and newness of life. This is His message for society today: that life must be cleansed from within if we are to have right relationships of man with man, and build up a social order in harmony with the principle of the kingdom of heaven.

Sport Glances By Grayson

A GREAT baseball player doesn't always make a good manager. All-Americans frequently flop as football coaches, and what is true of the two top American games also holds good in hockey. King Clancy's long major experience as a shining defense man, his courage, intelligence, and militancy, seemed to blend into a happy mixture for managerial success. Clancy went to the Montreal Maroons amid a blare of trumpets, but the club developed a demoralizing complex from the outset of the current campaign, and the loss was elected for the sacrifice in less than six weeks. Newey Lalonde, one of the fastest and canniest centers in the annals of the glistering game, failed to ring the bell as a pilot. Sprague Cleghorn, an old defense fowler of Clancy and a teammate of Lalonde, was one of the best barrier braves to ever battle an opponent. Cleghorn became manager of the Newark Bears in the Canadian-American League. The showing of the team was no inspiration for the promoters, and the Bears went out of the picture after a single season, due to their owners' inability to finance a rink.

DIE CLEGHORN, brother of Sprague and also for many years a major star, took over the helm of the Pirates, nee Yellow Jackets, but that made no change in the cellar complex of the Pittsburgh delegation in the National Hockey League. Frank Patenaud, who with Lester, long head of the New York Rangers, did a brotherly playing act in both the east and far west, when each side of the continent had major league representation, was unable to establish the Boston Bruins on a winning basis. Clem Loughlin starred as a forward in the topnotch hockey pphere for some years before making his bow as a pilot with the London Tees of the International. Loughlin did well with the Tees, and was booked into the Chicago Blackhawks' camp as playing chief. But the Blackhawks remained in the National League basement, and at the start of this season Loughlin was ousted in favor of Bill Stewart.

BULLET JOE SIMPSON failed to hit the bull's eye as manager of the Americans as well as the New Haven Eagles. In short whirls as playing manager of the Pittsburgh Yellow Jackets and the Americans, Lionel Conacher's success was not anywhere near his standing as a combatant. Harry (Happy) Holmes, Cyclone Taylor, Bud Bill Coutu, Normie Hines, the late Goldie Rodgers, Clint Benedict, Ken Randall, Harvey Lockburn, and Jimmy Gardiner are other splendid players of the nifty pass who either failed to get any great distinction as managers or who currently are encountering plenty of obstacles. A number have suffered because of a lack of material, of course, but hockey headliners frequently lack patience with players who lack the ability of themselves, and there is a vast difference between making the most of your knowledge and skill in combat and imparting it to others.

Old Pioneer Town Is Now Crumbling Ruins

By United Press

AMARILLO, Texas—Another chapter in the story of early life on the plains was uncovered by paleontologist Floyd Studer and a group of Amarillo business men at the abandoned Mexican trading post of Tecolote on Trujillo creek in Oldham county.

The abandoned town on the huge Matador ranch has been seen by few modern Texans. Mexican sheep herders were believed to have built the houses soon after the conquest of New Mexico.

Across a canyon from a row of crumbling houses, built of irregular stones, the party found a cluster of 51 martars, or small pits in rocks used for grinding grain. The number of martars led the explorers to believe that a large number of residents once lived at the post.

Tecolote became a stage coach point, but was abandoned before the coming of cattlemen to Texas. Old-timers remember the post much as it is today, a row of crumbling rock houses.

The village was left as the party found it. Studer photographed the houses and ruins of the early settlers and mapped the area. The changing creek bed soon will wipe out evidence of man's having lived in the desolate canyon, he said.

Texas Agricultural Income Increases

AUSTIN, Texas—Cash income from agriculture in Texas during December as computed by the University of Texas Bureau of Business Research was $26,121,000, whereas the average December farm cash income during the base period—1928-1932—was approximately $23,040,000. Thus the farm cash income in December, 1937, was 113.2 per cent of that of the average December farm cash income during the five year period, 1928 to 1932, inclusive.

For 1936 the computed farm cash income for Texas during December was only $20,450,000 or 88.6 per cent of that during the average December in the base period. The increase in farm cash income in December, 1937, over the corresponding month the year before was nearly 25 per cent.

Industry Leads In Construction Gains For South

DALLAS—Construction activity in the Southern states for 1937, although falling about 14 per cent from the all-time peak years of 1936, reflected further advancement of the trend of recent years toward larger proportions of industrial building in the South, the All-South Development Council reported today.

The total valuation of construction contracts placed during the year was $810,055,000—better than the records for the extremely active years of 1927 and 1928—with industrial and engineering projects accounting for the largest share, 38 per cent. The three other divisions, private building, public building, and highway and bridge construction, each accounted for approximately one-third of the rest of the total.

This division of the South's construction activity for 1937 represents a considerable shift in the ratio of type of expenditures when it is compared with the analysis of 1931 figures, the Council's report pointed out. In that year the bulk of construction contracts was formed by roads and bridges, with 41 per cent of the total; industrial and engineering projects constituted 31 per cent, public buildings made up 15 per cent while private building was good for only 11 per cent.

Although industrial construction is closely linked to the other types of construction work in that "people and improvements always go where there are jobs, and vice versa," the report says, the fact that this field is now setting the pace can be attributed largely to official efforts of southern states to lay their attractions of physical resources and co-operative attitude before expanding and decentralizing industrialists.

While Texas has not joined with the southeastern states which have been conspicuous in this movement, sentiment for a similar program here is growing among state leaders, one of whom, Col. E. O. Thompson of the Railroad Commission, is quoted in the report as saying: "An industrial program of the Louisiana type, stressing fairness in taxes as the biggest inducement, is Texas' greatest need, and nothing is being done about it. There would be less relief problem, shorter bread lines and more markets for the farmer and rancher if Texas were able to assure all industries that they will be given a square deal if they help in building up payrolls and markets."

The South's natural resources, particularly the forests and mines which yield the raw materials required for basic chemical manufacturing and processing industries, have been responsible for much of the new construction. Manufacturers' Record says that 55 per cent of the $350,000,000—conservative estimate—invested in chemical process plants in the last two years has been for projects in the Southern states. Wood, oil and chemicals have accounted for about 76 per cent of Louisiana's $37,000,000 worth of new industrial construction in the last year under that state's "take care of industry and industry will take care of us" program.

Influenza Is Not So Bad This Year Health Officer Says

AUSTIN, Texas—Influenza, while not of such prevalence as last year, is still occurring frequently enough to cause alarm, according to Dr. Geo. W. Cox, State Health Officer.

In its present form, its symptoms may range from a common cold to high fever, backache and prostration. However, pneumonia as a complication represents the real hazard. And, as is well known, pneumonia is an exceedingly dangerous foe. The remedy is bed on first appearance of a cold, and remaining there until advised by the physician that one can safely get out of it.

Everyone should realize that in its mildest form influenza can easily become a very serious matter. Of course, prevention is better than cure. While influenza seems to be no respecter of persons, the careful observance of a few common sense rules will materially strengthen one's resistance to an attack. Some of these rules:

- In so far as possible, avoid intimate contact with members of the family who have colds or influenza.
- Keep the feet dry.
- Wash the hands thoroughly before meals.
- And if you do develop influenza, see your doctor at once.

LION HUNT UPSETS HOME

By United Press

SAN JOSE, Calif.—Lion hunting and matrimony do not mix according to Mrs. Katherine Bruce, wife of California's official lion hunter. In her petition for divorce she charged her husband spends so much time hunting lions all over the state that there isn't enough left for her to make marriage worth while.

Children Are Warned Of Lurking Bob-Cat

TEXLINE, Texas—Children in this area are not permitted to ride alone on horseback after the cows at dusk since ranchers along Carrizo creek found several calves killed by either a bob-cat or mountain lion.

The large cats are not native to this area, but occasionally stray down the Carrizo from the nearby mountains.

A few years ago a mountain lion followed the creek eastward from the mountains, pursuing a small Hereford calf. The lion apparently had fought the lion but she, the calf and the lion were all nearly exhausted when the rancher found them and shot the cat.
