Adding More Fuel to a Hot Argument

One of the controversies people can become rather bitter about these days is whether women should hold jobs that otherwise might go to unemployed men. The so-called recession has fed the arguments and the ultimate of something or other was reached when Mrs. Elsie Fern, a mid-western housewife, filed incorporation papers for her "Employment Reform Association." This little organization will try to get all employed married women whose husbands can support them fired from their jobs.

Angering Mrs. Fern in particular is the fact that her 18-year-old daughter, Dorothy is through high school and unable to find work. She fears her son, Edward will be in the same fix when he is graduated in June. Mrs. Fern believes that if married women who have "perfectly good men" to support them would stay home there would be plenty of good jobs for youngsters just getting out of high school.

Mrs. Fern's idea might bring forth a few added cheers if it were not for some facts brought out by two recent surveys on the subject of women who work. These surveys indicated pretty definitely that women do not seek employment outside the home because they just must have a fur coat like that cute Mrs. Smith down the street or because they can't bear living on the wrong side of the tracks—or for the fun of it. The surveys show that women work because they have to—usually because they have at least one other person wholly or partially dependent on their income.

The National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs and the Young Women's Christian Association conducted the surveys. The business and professional women's survey of 12,000 women with a median annual income of $1315—well above the average for the 10,000,000 employed American women—shows that one woman worker in two supports other persons and that one-sixth of those reporting are heads of households with from two to seven members. Further, there are only 3 per cent of the women who have no dependents and live in homes which they do not help support.

The Y. W. C. A. group surveyed younger women with smaller incomes. Among that group 66 per cent have other persons wholly or in part dependent on them. And the median wage for the group is only $18 a week.

So in light of these surveys it seems that the great majority of working women work because they and their families need the money they earn. And if Mrs. Fern's campaign makes any headway—which it probably won't—real hardships may result.

But it is also true that the problem of young people being unable to find jobs remains very much with us. Mrs. Fern's association may yet do some good—by calling further attention to the fact that too many high school and college graduates can not get work.

Poultry shipments totaled 76 cars, compared with 98 cars during February last year, a decline of 23 per cent; and egg shipments amounted to only 14 cars, against 20 cars a year ago. Only one car of eggs came from outside Texas, and this was shipped in from Kansas. None were received from other states during February, 1937.

Woodul Announces As a Candidate For Attorney General

Is Candidate

Walter Woodul

HOUSTON, Texas, March 31.—Lieutenant Governor Walter Woodul of Houston, announced his candidacy today for the office of Attorney General of Texas.

In a statement to the people of Texas, Lieutenant Governor Woodul said: "If elected Attorney General, I shall devote my time and energies to the duties of the office. I shall strive to give the people and every department of state government a non-political and fearless administration, and will conduct my department as efficiently and economically as possible. I shall choose my assistants on the basis of merit rather than politics."

"I shall safeguard and defend to my utmost ability the interest of the people of Texas and of the public schools in the public domain. I shall enforce the antitrust laws of this state, the oil laws and all other laws it may become the Attorney General's duty to enforce."

"I believe that my legal training and experience, together with my service in both branches of the State Legislature and my two terms as Lieutenant Governor fit me to fill the office of Attorney General in a manner acceptable to the people."

"I plan to make an active campaign on my own merits, visiting as many sections of Texas as time permits, and discussing frankly the issues involved in the race." Woodul's great popularity with Texas voters was shown when he ran for Lieutenant Governor in 1934, his first race for a state office. He received twice as large a vote as any other candidate for Lieutenant Governor ever rolled up in a first primary. He led the entire Democratic ticket in the run-off primary.

Unopposed in 1936 for a second term as Lieutenant Governor, he received a total of 4,068,429 votes. Before entering the Lieutenant Governor's office, Woodul served in the Texas House and Senate, where he was a leader in the passage of laws for a unified highway system, better schools, improved labor conditions, and laws helpful to the farmer and livestock raiser.

His tenure as Lieutenant Governor has been marked by fairness and lack of partisanship. He has served 18 times as acting Governor of Texas.

Pledges of support for Woodul in his race for Attorney General have been received from every county in Texas.

SISTER MARY'S KITCHEN

By Mrs. Gaynor Maddox

VEAL is like a timid girl—needs masterful escorts to give it flavor. Mushrooms do well by veal, so does a hint of garlic. Green peppers, young onions, lemon juice and white wine all help develop character. Food and Nutrition News takes up the matter of veal cooking in a strong way. The results are worth repeating here. A little science in the kitchen saves a lot of headaches. In the scientific case of veal, veal has certain characteristics which must be remembered when cooking. It is the meat of the young bovine animal. It contains large amounts of connective tissue which can be made tender by proper cooking. The extractives which give meat its flavor are not as abundant in veal as they are in beef. Veal is low in fat content, too. When an animal puts on fat, the water content in the tissues is replaced by the fat. Consequently, veal has a higher water content than beef and if this is lost in cooking the meat will be dry. All of which leads to three considerations when cooking veal—soften the connective tissue, develop or increase flavor, and prevent undue evaporation losses.

Braising is Best Panbroiling and broiling are not good for veal chops. Braising is the best method for chops, because the long, slow cooking not only brings out their flavor but also softens the connective veal tissue.

Tomorrow's Menu

BREAKFAST Grapefruit, oatmeal muffins, scrambled eggs, coffee, milk. LUNCHEON Creamed fish on toast, sliced tomatoes with chives, chocolate hermits, tea, milk. DINNER Chopped green salad, roast shoulder of veal, mushroom brown gravy, baked sweet potatoes, buttered beans, fresh plum tart, coffee, milk.

Contrary to the usual opinion, veal can be roasted successfully. It has been found that veal may be roasted in an open pan, provided a constant moderate temperature is used. Beef, pork and lamb may be seared or not, according to personal preference, but searing tends to dry out the surface of veal. The best result in roasting veal are obtained with a constant temperature of slow oven (300 degrees F).

Lardoons Enhance Flavor Lardons have a great deal to do with the juiciness of meat and the development of flavor during cooking. Add fat to veal by inserting strips of fat pork into the meat by means of a larding needle. These strips are called lardons. Pounded cod fat or slices of bacon or salt pork may be used over the surface. As the meat cooks, the fat cooks out of the lardons and into the meat, increasing juiciness and flavor.

Speakers Urge State Plan To Court Industry

DALLAS—Increasing sentiment for marshaling all Texas interests—industrial, political and social—behind a more realistic and aggressive program for industrial development of the state is seen by the All-South Development Council in the tenor of addresses made here before the Institute of Natural Resources and Industrial Development. The task of placing Texas in the dominating position which its wealth of resources, population and marketing potentials, and climatic and other advantages justify, said R. L. Thornton, president of the Mercantile bank of Dallas, is one for all of Texas, for all would share in its rewards. He said the task "demands the prompt beginning of a well-organized, consolidated, continuing program." That there is no lack of independent agencies, commissions, associations and other industry-developing bodies in the state was acknowledged by Louis W. Hickey of Dallas, representing the Associated General Contractors of America. But he emphasized that the time has come for consolidating them into a state-wide group, determining positive policies by the state to support their efforts, and "terminating the period of talk in favor of a period of productive action."

Both speakers pointed out that there is plenty of native Texas capital ready to go to work in new industrial fields, and that out-of-state industries are finding increasing need for many raw materials still dormant in Texas, but warned that capital, like labor, merits a just return and cannot be expected to venture without reasonable expectation of legitimate profit.

Commenting on the successful raising of cotton, cattle, corn, wheat, sugar and rice and citrus fruits, long Texas agricultural standbys, and the "gratifying development" of timber, oil, sulphur and gas resources, Mr. Hickey pointed out that there has been little systematic endeavor applied to "the vast wealth of as yet untouched resources." He said developers of these resources had "risked their time, efforts and money, and surely deserved the rewards they gained indeed, were it not for the perfectly legitimate prospect of private profit it would be idle even to talk about the development of resources and industry."

Attention was called, the Council's report said, "to the strides being taken in the field of industrial chemical research, and the opportunity for applying to Texas as the practical and profitable results of this research. Industry needs the agricultural and mineral resources of Texas, both those developed and those latent, in its many new products and processes, it was pointed out.

"Anyone who reads trade journals," Mr. Hickey said, "know what other states and groups of states are doing in the field of trying chemistry and agriculture to

Old Clothes Drive Barrels Will Be On Location Friday

Officers of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Carl Barnes Post today called attention to the old clothes drive that is being sponsored by the auxiliary.

Barrels are to be placed in front of five Ranger stores, located conveniently to every section of town, where the clothes may be left. The clothes will be collected from these barrels each evening by members of the auxiliary and turned over to the WPA sewing room, where they will be repaired and altered before being distributed to needy families.

This will provide more work for advantage of all three pursuits; yet industry, to the tremendous advantage of all three pursuits; yet he is forced to admit that Texas, with probably more latent assets than any other, is doing nothing."

The first part depicted the period before any settlers had appeared on this continent. In case you haven't guessed, it was the Indians. The curtains were drawn and revealed four Indian braves while an unseen choir sang, "America the Beautiful." For the first Thanksgiving, Claudine Jarvis read the poem "The First Thanksgiving." Cecelia McDowell and Margaret Watt danced the Minuet, which represented the Colonial period. A good corn husking contest was next. Francine Hatley and Darlyne McGreor sang a duet, all the boys tore "Home on the Range" to pieces, and Margaret Adkins sang "Polly Wally Doodle All the Day." Songs of the old South such as "Deep River" and "Swing Low Sweet Chariot" were sung by a group of "Negro slaves." As a closing number "America the Beautiful" was sung.

On Thursday, the members of the band gave an impromptu concert. This program was a burlesque on what goes on in the band hall each day the sixth period. No

CHAPTER XIX

"THE whole thing is rather like something out of a novel, isn't it?" Miss Thorvald went on. "All of us—Mr. Manthorpe, Father and I, being here under such unusual circumstances after meeting so casually for those few minutes in the studio. . . . And Mark's having been on vacation in the one place where he could possibly have found you."

"Yes, isn't it?" Constance agreed vaguely.

Ernest Thorvald was waiting to speak to Constance when she went downstairs a little later.

"Miss Maidwell," he said, "nothing we can say or do for you could discharge our obligation to you. But I want you to understand that you will not lose anything through your kindness."

"Thank you," Constance said. "We needn't talk about that."

She thought dreamily. Suppose I have already lost the only thing in the world I really wanted?"

"Dr. Rogers thinks that my son has a genuine chance of recovery," Ernest Thorvald went on. "Two days ago it did not seem that he had one chance in ten thousand. And his welfare seems likely to be in your hands for some time to come."

When Constance seemed surprised, he continued, "It may seem strange, after the boy's—er—amazing change of heart, that he should still ask to see Miss Wynne. But the doctor says that isn't surprising. He thinks the effect of the shock he has had may last some time. I need not tell you that we shall be very glad to dispense with Miss Wynne's presence in the house."

Constance thought with the flippancy into which she often made her escape these days. Well, well! This stand-in business seems to be developing into a growing concern.

"Of course we want to do all we can to make you stay as little of a burden as possible. Do you ride?"

"A little. I grew up on a Maryland farm."

"Fine. I'll have a pony sent up for you to look over. Dr. Rogers thinks we ought to have our daily routine as sane and wholesome as possible."

He would, Constance thought with an impressive smile.

AND indeed, life in the pleasant, rambling house, with its leisurely old-world charm did seem to move on as smoothly and gracefully as if there had been no grim struggle with death going on within its walls.

Throughout the first few days George Thorvald had continued to waken, crying out terrified for Camilla Wynne—moaning that he had killed her. But each time, a few words from Constance—sometimes her bare presence—served to quiet him. After that first day the identification of her with the actress seemed so firmly fixed in the boy's fevered mind that there was no longer any necessity for artificial disguise.

Constance slipped in and out of the sick room at the call of the nurses; but it was Miss Wilcox with whom she chatted occasionally.

"I understand the Wynne woman has been definitely agreed off," she said to Constance one day. "I shouldn't have been surprised if she'd made trouble when she found out George had given her the gate. But since Mr. Thorvald had a talk with her she seems to have decided that the kind of advertising she might stir up wouldn't be so good for little Camilla."

DR. ROGERS Constance saw only occasionally. That he was in and out, however, she knew—driving the 20 miles from Los Angeles, where his main practice was, every day, and occasionally in the middle of the night.

One night, toward morning, he knocked at her door; and when she roused sufficiently to throw on a negligee and open it, asked her to come to the sick boy's room.

"Just as you are, please," he said curtly, casting a perfunctory look over her tousled hair and sleep-dusted cheeks. "He won't know whether you've got on a cocktail gown or a bathing suit."

Constance was cross and a little confused from her sudden awakening, and unreasonably piqued by his abrupt, impersonal manner.

"Of course, Doctor," some perverse inn prompted her to quote. "I understand, you want me to call him a bedside nurse."

"But is it quite fair? Sometimes he is bound to awaken. . . . And that hurts, I know. . . . That is one of the things you have taught me."

It was the impression of Camilla Wynne as the nurse in "A Doctor's Best Friend" that had roused him to shouts of mirth that night at Daimler's. She had thought he would be amused now. But he only said with a weary shrug:

"Don't waste time practicing on me. You're letter-perfect already." Feeling snubbed and hurt out of all proportion, she followed him to George Thorvald's room. But she could never entirely dislike him when she saw him with the sick boy; he was so skillful, so sure of himself—so genuinely tender.

When the magic of her mimicry had done its work, and she was moving down the corridor toward her own room, she hesitated. She was wide-awake now. Perhaps she had better go to the library and pick up something to read in case sleep failed to return to her at once.

JUST inside the library door, she halted abruptly, startled to find that she was not alone.

Huddled in the corner of the couch, Mark Rogers was fast asleep—his cheek resting on one arm, his feet still on the floor, as if he had sat down, intending only to rest there for a moment, and then had dropped off in utter exhaustion. Constance was shocked when she saw how utterly weary he looked—shocked, and unaccountably touched, as women often are by the helplessness of men in sleep.

Perhaps it was because in his weariness he seemed younger and a little wistful—if, Constance thought, he might have dropped off wondering whether there might not be more to life sometimes than telling people what to do, and being caustic about it when they didn't do it.

A light but chill wind had sifted down from the mountains that evening. As Constance watched, the sleeping man stirred uncomfortably, and shivered a little. Taking a Mexican blanket from the end of the couch, she folded it about him. Without opening his eyes, he snuggled under the comfortable warmth, shifted to a more comfortable position, and said with a drowsy half smile, "Thanks, Hilda. You're a brick."

Constance smiled a little bleakly. So Hilda Thorvald had performed this service for him, too, often enough so that he took it for granted that this was she. . . . The thought caused a faint flutter of annoyance which Constance, unaccountably enough, could not force.

THE BENDER.

made arrangements for his funeral, they failed to take into consideration one thing. . . . the fighting spirit of the man. He fought his fight and won. . . . grit to the core.

Nor is the number of stout hearts small. There are many of them, and as a rule their lives are an example of cheerfulness and patience to their more fortunate fellow-men. One of my friends once told me after viewing the Ringling Brothers circus for the first time, that he was amazed at the feats performed by the acrobats but what amazed him even more was that there were so many of them proficient in this art.

Much in line with the foregoing is euthanasia or the legalized killing of all who are apparently without hope of recovery. It would not surprise me at all if the proponents of mercy deaths, as they are frequently called, are big strong healthy men who are in little danger of being exterminated in this manner. If the ideas of these men had been followed out in the case of General Pershing, in all probability he would not be with us today, since his doctors considered his case as almost hopeless. While it is true that many of us wish that death would relieve us when we are suffering excruciating pain; yet after recovery we are glad that we are still alive. Dr. Joseph Dillon says, "We don't know prognosis. People give us credit for a lot, but we really don't know. It is not proper to take advantage of despair. A woman in labor begs us to die—but a short time later she is ready to smile." And Assistant District Attorney James T. Neary of New York City declares that euthanasia is a pagan philosophy.

With regard to the plebiscite he has called for April 10 in Austria, the dictionarist says: "Because I am a better Democrat than so many Democrats, the people shall speak out." Sure, the people shall speak out, while thousands of troops remain in Austria. Sure, the people will vote for the Fuehrer in fear of their lives. But to say that this is a democratic method is something else again.

To a gallant class of souls can be added the name of General John J. Pershing. Although his friends gave him up and had even WASHINGTON.—This country is going to have to produce more big-time public enemies among the women if Bureau of Prisons Director Jim Bennett is to get that new federal penitentiary for women which he has urged Congress to provide.

Bennett and Attorney General Cummings asked for funds to start three new prisons, one of them to be "another Alcatraz" for hard-boiled women convicts. They complained that the federal women's reformatory was neither big enough to hold all their women prisoners nor strong enough to keep gentleman friends from busting in and rescuing some of the inmates. Furthermore, they said, there was need of a place where all the tough ones could be segregated.

But a checkup shows that American womanhood has produced almost no public enemies of note and that among the small handful who have had their photographs in other than hometown papers, each lady has achieved fame in crime only through association with a more celebrated husband or boy friend.

In numbers, federal female prisoners trail far behind—only 1283 of them were among 22,896 persons admitted to federal prisons last year.

Kathryn Kelly, wife of Machine Gun Kelly, and according to some theories the brains of the Urschel kidnaping gang, unquestionably is the star boarder among Bennett's lambs. But Kathryn comes far from being a feminine Al Capone, even though she is a permanent guest at the Federal House of Correction in Alcatraz.

There's also Dolores Delaney, who figured in whatever tender moments Alvin Karpis may have had. And Sylvia Sieber Bird, serving a long term because she and her sister Barbara—who is still out—helped spring the bank-robbing Birds from the Cleveland jail last year.

But that's about the list and the only other lady celebrity whom Bennett has to keep indoors is Mrs. Mae Scheible of New York, who used to operate certain houses of questionable character.

Evelyn Frechette, who spent a couple of years as a federal prisoner because of the aid and comfort she gave her bad boy friend John Dillinger, emerged to join a traveling show and now travels around the country telling small crowds all about the late John and how crime doesn't pay.

So the hard-boiled House Appropriations Committee looked the situation over and decided that Mr. Bennett, for the time being, could have only one new $1,350,000 prison, not three. That probably will have to be used for men, although the women probably will get theirs sooner or later because hundreds of them are now farmed out to state institutions.

Federal prisons never do get the real fancy murders, even when they're convicted. Federal crimes for which women are most often convicted are, in order of frequency, violations of the narcotics act, bootlegging, violation of the immigration act, counterfeiting and forgery. In most cases the women are only accomplices or accessories after the fact, often harboring or aiding some man who's the cause of it all.

SPORT GLANCES - By Grayson

BELLEAIR, Fla.—Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis' sweeping investigation of the St. Louis Cardinal fan system, in which it was alleged there was deceptive maneuvering on the part of the Red Bird chain, is bound to have a far-flung effect on baseball.

Landis, who all along has contended that extensive farming borders too closely on syndicate baseball, based his investigation on the fact that the Cards, through Cedar Rapids in the Western League, actually had two chains in smaller leagues instead of one, thanks to a gentleman's agreement with Harry S. Johnson, Cedar Rapids president.

To have more than one working or trading agreement in the same minor league is a violation of baseball rules.

There were plenty of big shots called into individual conference with the silver-tatched high commissioner of baseball. And his threat to declare from 100 to 500 members of the St. Louis Cardinals' farm free agents no doubt will have a jarring effect on the big-wigs of the game.

LANDIS, following his investigation of the Cards, had to do something drastic or frankly admit that baseball now is—and henceforth would be—controlled by 15 separate major league trusts.

The Philadelphia Phillies at present are the only big league club which is not trying up every promising player it can get its hands on. And that is only because the Phils are too poor to maintain the practice.

As a result of the commissioner's deep probing into the St. Louis outfit, chain-store operators in the future no doubt will be careful to stick to written agreements and see that contracts are recorded and promulgated according to the rules.

As it is, all the players Landis threatened to declare free agents as a result of his investigation were not Class D players.

Among the brighter major league prospects were Pitchers Potter and Van Fleet, who starred for Cedar Rapids in 1937 to such an extent that they now are with the Cards' Sacramento farm, and Pitcher Taylor, promoted from Cedar Rapids to Rochester.

THE Sam Breardon-Rickey organization controls about 30 minor league clubs. In the AA's it owns Rochester, Columbus, and Sacramento.

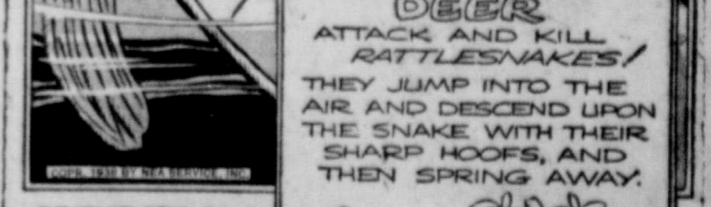

It has a league franchise in Houston of the Texas League, which alone has 75 players in its training camps this spring. In B circuits, the Cardinals own Asheville of the Piedmont; Columbus, Ga., of the South Atlantic; and Decatur of the Three-Eyes.

In C loops they run Portsmouth, O., of the Mid-Atlantic and Springfield, Mo., of the Western Association.

Their D league properties are Albuquerque, N. M., of the Arizona-Texas; Cambridge, Md., of the Eastern Shore; New Iberia, La., of the Evangeline; Albany, Ga., of the Georgia-Florida; Shelby, N. C., of the North Carolina State; Monessen, Pa., of the Pennsylvania State; Midland, of the West Texas-New Mexico; Union City, Tenn., and clubs in the Florida State and Kitty Leagues.

All of which means there are a lot of baseball men wondering what the final windup of Judge Landis' investigation will be.

Displays at Cooking School Colorful and Unique

A bunch of compliments fashioned in flowers for the merchants of Ranger and those having part in the cooking school, tied with the combined sentiments of all, would read, "The most colorful and unique display for the annual Merchants Fair ever attempted thus far," which would well cover nine years.

"The Foods Fashion Revue," displayed each afternoon through a large mirror by Mrs. Arreva D. French, has proved a delightful feature of the school and also something different. Mrs. French is assisted by one of Ranger's favored colored maids, who keeps busy backstage with an ear well trained for a cue. Beautiful have been the dishes prepared this week, and incidentally, quite delicious. What the "male order" will be for new recipes after the school remains to be heard by the wives. It has long been said when a man orders food with a cup of coffee, it is pie, five to one. "Pie-ideas" are fine, but we are thinking after this school it will be food—just something good to eat.

If you have been wondering about how to produce a decorative and delightful salad or dessert, get a bright idea, then let the family agree it is a delicious one. It will sparkle, it will shine, will glimmer, it will be "jellied" provided you try one of the recipes offered at yesterday's school. And it will slide down as smooth as Henie on skates—and there will be calls for more!

So numerous are the hints offered 'tis hard to enumerate them all. But we do remember there are new and refreshingly different hints galore! "Pain perdu" is not a kind of ache, but French for "Lost Bread." If you're lost as to what to do with more than one day old bread remember Mrs. French's suggestions along with others making more fun the art of cooking and satisfaction of economy. The school will run through Friday with a night program. Every merchant having part in this parade of display of foods, are especially asked to remember to invite friends and please include members of your family. An entertaining program has been planned under the leadership of A. N. Larson, and the high point will be the cake contest, added this year by Mrs. Tucker, whose shortening is used at the school.

The auditorium has been filled by the close of registration each afternoon and the general opinion is that each display surpasses those of seasons past, a personal tribute to each splendid merchant having part. The combined efforts of these people have once more demonstrated the success to be obtained through "cooperation."

Exhilarating Feeling After Cara Nome Facial
There is a tingly, delightful and exhilarating feeling following a Cara Nome facial. Many persons who have enjoyed a 45 minute facial given by Miss Auline Glenn, at the Oil City Pharmacy this week, whole heartedly agree. Cara Nome accessories for the daily use of well groomed persons, assist so materially in keeping the skin soft, smooth and silky. Each article is priced with the real economy so popular today. Another reason why Cara Nome way to Beauty is as smart as it is effective.

Normal skin, oily skin or dry skin, is given authentic hints as to how it should be treated.

Miss Glenn is again being assisted by Miss Bobbie Lee Tolliver, who will be happy to arrange an appointment for you. Miss Glenn's visit here closes in mid-afternoon Saturday of this week.

Mrs. A. L. McGahey Elected President

Sixteen members of Young School Parent-Teacher Association reported for the Wednesday afternoon called meeting held at the auditorium at 3:30 o'clock, under the direction of the president, Mrs. Arthur Murrell.

The election of officers was immediately entered into since the session was called for that paramount purpose. Termination of the election named as president for the coming year, Mrs. A. L. McGahey, first vice president Mrs. S. P. Boon; second vice president, Mrs. T. J. Anderson; third vice secretary, Mrs. Arthur Murrell; secretary, Mrs. Powell; treasurer, Miss Ruth Riekle.

Special personal expression of thanks goes to those present, offered by Mrs. Murrell.

The association is to be represented at the district conference convening at Breckenridge April 5, 6, by Supt. W. T. Walton, Mrs. Arthur Murrell, Mrs. A. L. McGahey, and one teacher of the school, who will be named later.

Rebekah Lodge Drill Team Visits Woodman Circle

Julia Alexander Grove No. 1954 of the Woodman Circle was hostess at the IOOF Wednesday afternoon to the Rebekah Lodge drill team, whose program feature added greatly to the hour. Attractive were the members, frocked in pink and green. Those having part were: Meses. Louie Calder, Ava Nell Burke, Annie Robertson, Mollie Patterson, Odie Stiles, Jewel Green, Emma Stiles, Pearl Patterson, Bessie Harrison, Laura Melton, Patsy Patterson and May Eley.

Guardian Mrs. Edna Blackwell presided over the session which was closed with the serving oficed tea and cake.

Members of the hostess group will go to Mineral Wells Monday evening, April 4, as guests of the hostess chapter.

Currently sitting on Europe's hottest seat is President Antanas Smetona of Lithuania, whose government capitulated to an ultimatum from Poland demanding restoration of diplomatic relations. As a result of popular resentment over accession to "enemy" demands, two cabinet ministers turned in resignations and others were expected to follow, perhaps even that of Smetona himself.
