Record of the Past is Reason for Optimism

Unless all signs fail, America is taking a new climb out of the depression. Industrial production expanded in October for the fifth consecutive month, unemployment figures are dropping rapidly, and business sentiment as a whole is unusually optimistic.

No one knows, of course, how far and how fast this climb will be continued. We shan't be able to say goodbye to this depression until our business indices have reached the 1929 level; indeed, because our population is greater now than it was then, that level will have to be surpassed before we can truly say that nation-wide prosperity is here again.

Past experience may not be a perfect guide, in a world so changed as the world of today. Yet it is the only guide we have, and it has a rather encouraging message.

During the last half century, American business has been hit by five full-dress depressions—including the present one. After each of the other four, industry and trade climbed to a higher level than the one they had occupied before, and the general living standard of the American people went up with them. And the most encouraging thing is the fact that although each of these climbs took place during a period of technological improvement—which is supposed to mean a percentage decline in the number of jobs—the working population of the country actually increased faster than the total population.

This is made clear in figures contained in a bulletin just issued by the Central National Bank of Cleveland.

For example: from 1890 to 1930, the country's population increased 95 per cent—from 63,000,000 to 123,000,000. Yet the number of jobs increased by 113 per cent in the same period—from 23,000,000 in 1890 to 49,000,000 in 1930.

To look at it from a different angle: between 1890 and 1900, American business created 6,000,000 new jobs; between 1900 and 1910, it created 9,000,000 new jobs; between 1910 and 1920, it created 4,000,000 new jobs; between 1920 and 1930 it created 7,000,000 new jobs.

Where does that leave us? Well, the bank's bulletin goes on to remark that our highest standard of living heretofore came when there were about 40 jobs for each 100 of the population. Our population today is 130,000,000; we need, therefore, approximately 52,000,000 jobs. Today about 45,000,000 people are regularly employed. There is, accordingly, a lag of some 7,000,000 jobs to be made up.

Past experience indicates that that is by no means an impossible hurdle. In the ordinary, normal course of business development we ought to get over it without strain. When you stop to think that our industrial and commercial plant is operating far below capacity, you can see that one or two years of continued expansion might do the trick very nicely.

There is every reason, then, to look forward to 1933 with the utmost confidence.

Possible Congressional Double Feature

Mexican President Completes Four Years In Office Amid Oil Turmoil

By William H. Lander United Press Staff Correspondent

MEXICO, D. F.—Center of a big controversy over the policies of his administration, General Lazaro Cardenas today completed four years as president of the United States. He still has two years more to go before his term expires, but the air already is full of the preliminary maneuvers of those who hope to succeed him in power.

Friends and adversaries of Cardenas consider him, respectively, as the great benefactor of Mexico, or as the man who has brought ruin to his nation. Some hail the Socialistic "Cardenismo" as the means through which the masses of peasants and proletarians are being lifted to a nobler life, while others declare that the president, through well-intentioned but "communistic and utopian" plans, has wrecked the economic structure of his country.

Only the perspective of time and long-term results will be able correctly to weigh the numerous things done or attempted in these four years, which have probably been the most active as far as social and economic reforms than any other period of Mexican history since the days of Benito Juarez.

From one tip of the republic to the other, the influence of Cardenas has been felt. He has taken over the big estates and converted them into agrarian communities; built roads, irrigation systems, sugar-centrals; nationalized the principal railways; seized the foreign petroleum holdings.

In so doing he has antagonized powerful financial interests abroad, and caused a suspension of diplomatic relations with Great Britain. But Cardenas has gone forward, without any indication of swerving.

Today—after being president of Mexico for four whole years—Cardenas is still a strange person to millions of his own people as well as to foreigners. Ever since his break with ex-President Plutarco Elias Calles in June, 1935, Mexico and the border towns of the United States, from San Antonio to San Diego, have been rife with rumors that Cardenas was "through". Yet, the truth of the matter is that he has had less opposition than practically all of his predecessors.

The very fact that Cardenas has been able to stay in office four years bespeaks in part how weak the opposition has been. Tomorrow, when he will have completed four years and one day in power, he will have broken all records for service as president since General Porfirio Diaz was overthrown in 1911, after 36 years in power.

Cardenas' predecessors have had so much trouble that only two served their full four-year terms—General Alvaro Obregon (1920-24) and General Calles (1924-25). Obregon was murdered just as he was about to be inaugurated in 1928 for a second term.

Thirteen other presidents served terms ranging from 45 minutes to three years, and two of these—Francisco I. Madero and General Venustiano Carranza were murdered in office. As a matter of fact, Carranza was chief executive for more than four years, but president of the republic for only three—from May 5, 1917 to May 21, 1920. Previously he had been "charge of the executive power" from August 20, 1914, to Nov. 24, 1914, and from Oct. 6, 1915 to May 5, 1917.

In contrast to these other presidents who had powerful rivals, Cardenas has had no opposition worthy of the name since he overthrew the unofficial overlordship of Calles in 1935 and deported him to California in 1936. Yet frequently there has been much talk and even headlines predicting Cardenas' imminent overthrow. Especially in connection with the cessation of American silver purchases and the strong notes written by Mr. Cordell Hull. Many people, of course, have hoped that something would happen to erase Cardenas from the presidential chair. He himself once told me that he knew there were plenty of people who would be very happy to see him removed from office.

Now the relatively weak opposition that he has had less than practically all of his predecessors.

Peach Tree May Be Bearing Christmas

By United Press FORT WORTH, Texas—Mrs. J. R. Preston hopes that she can have ripe peaches for Christmas from a tree that simply won't recognize winter.

The freak tree blooms in the spring, like Mrs. Preston's other five peach trees; but it doesn't bear fruit until October, long after the others are through. It withstood the first freezes of winter, while the others obeyed winter and shed their leaves.

"I'm going to leave it alone," said Mrs. Preston. "Maybe we'll have peaches for Christmas."

position that does exist is seeking to build up its forces in order constitutionally to obtain the power by putting over a candidate for president in the elections of July, 1940.

While there has been some talk of extending Cardenas' term to eight years (as was done for President Gerardo Machado in Cuba), the president himself is anxious to quit office in two more years. He wants to speed up his program so that it will be proceeding smoothly by then. As far as is possible, he wants to keep his hands off the selection of the next official candidate for the presidency. Whether or not this can be done remains to be seen.

Curiously enough, Cardenas took office before the term of his predecessor expired. General Abelardo Rodriguez' term ended at one minute after midnight, Dec. 1, 1934. Cardenas was inaugurated in the National Stadium at midday, Nov. 30, 30, in order to avoid having an inauguration at midnight, or have the nation go several hours without a president, it did the reverse; it went for approximately 12 hours with two presidents.

Cardenas really began his untrammled ruling in Jun, 1935, when he split with Calles. Calles until then was a maker and a breaker of presidents. Cardenas surprised many by keeping cool and letting Calles know who was the real constitutional president. Since then Cardenas has been pulling one surprise after another, and every time that a period of calm appears, people wonder "What is Cardenas thinking of doing next?"

CAST OF CHARACTERS
JUDY ALCOFF—admiral's daughter, who faced a choice between two navy suitors.

YACHTING—Crushing is the news that Bill is dead and that Jack may be injured for life.

CHAPTER XXI

IT was only another casualty in the long list of many. The papers carried headlines: "Navy Flyers Crash at Sea."

The reporters who came, the heartless, businesslike voices on the telephone, revolved her.

Then, hearing the baby cry, and Diane's tear-choked voice quieting him, Judy knew that she must put aside her personal problems.

Judy pulled herself together, and did her best to assuage the stunned, incredulous grief that was making Diane so hollow-eyed.

Pan American Parley Will Add New Chapter To Four Centuries Of Lima, Peru, History Making

By Harry W. Frantz
United Press Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON.—Lima, "City of Kings," with a rich history of four centuries, will have a new day of glory on Dec. 9, when the Eighth Conference of American States convenes at the Peruvian capital.

With a cultural heritage derived from high indigenous culture of early centuries, a long period of royal splendor as the seat of the Spanish Viceroy, and a modern republic era marked by progress and civic pride, the city on the Rimac is regarded here as the logical birthplace for the intended cultural rapprochement of the American republics.

The promotion of cultural relations is among the major topics of the Pan American conference, and the hundred delegates from all parts of the American continents who assemble at Lima will witness not only the visible symbols of perience for Diane, to go there and watch them take Bill's body off. You must stay with her. I—I think it will be better if you wait until Jack is in the Naval Hospital before you—"

"But I must see him!" Judy cried. "I can't stand this. I've counted the hours, the minutes—"

"I know," her mother said. She did not meet Judy's eyes. "There will be reporters and photographers. Let's not give them a Roman holiday. Jack is weak—I spoke to Commander Sloane—and he, too, thinks it most advisable that you wait until they have taken Jack to the hospital. By this evening you'll be able to—"

Judy controlled the rebellious words which were on the tip of her tongue. She realized that the experience would be disastrous for Diane. A flag draped body—the homecoming of the man who had kissed her goodby, who had said carelessly, "See you Wednesday!"

But for herself, meeting Jack would be to find reassurance—to see with her own eyes his face; to hear his voice. To be sure, sure that he was alive. No matter how badly he was injured, she told herself, all she asked was to look at him. To see his eyes move, to touch his hair.

A ROMAN holiday, her mother had said. Reporters, photographers. They would make cloying, sentimental copy of her joy at seeing Jack. They would print "ADMIRAL'S DAUGHTER SOBS OVER NAVAL FLYER INJURED IN CRASH AT SEA."

So for two hours she and Diane sat side by side on the sofa, a terrible, waiting stillness enveloping them. Now they were carrying Bill's body down. Now they were lifting Jack. Judy prayed inwardly that the men would be gentle with him. She thought of the cold, choppy water in which he had been immersed. She thought of him sitting in a cockpit, waiting for the nose to slap into the waves. How had he crawled out? And Bill, flying low, forgetful of his own danger!

Maybe they'd give Bill a medal. A medal! She wanted to laugh, suddenly. They'd pay Diane with a piece of worthless silver or gold for the loss of everything she had held dear.

Jack wouldn't have wanted Bill to risk his own life. Jack might have shouted to him, told him to go back . . .

And yet, even as she sat there she knew that she would never be able to ask Jack anything about those dark hours after his ship crashed. The glory of what had happened would be locked in his heart. All the raw pain, all the deep, hidden gratitude. Men didn't talk about moments like those. The men who had been on the Akron with Ward, and who had flown through that storm, never spoke of it now.

At seven o'clock, her mother came back to the bungalow and said, "I'll stay with Diane. There's a car outside to take you to the hospital."

When the chauffeur opened the door for her, she tumbled out murmuring, "Thank you." There was a wide, empty hall, smelling of antiseptic. A nurse came forward, and said, "Miss Alcott! Commander Sloane said you may go right up."

"Sick Officers' Quarters," said the nurse to the man in the elevator. Judy's heart was beating wildly, and the palms of her hand were damp.

Jack was lying flat on the bed. His face was pale, his eyes were closed. There was a heavy white plaster cast encasing his shoulder, and under the covers it made a lump, as if it extended down his side.

"Jack!" she cried. His eyes flew open.

"Judy!" He wasn't unconscious. He wasn't! She was so thankful tears came into her eyes. She dropped into the chair beside the bed. "Oh, Jack!" There was nothing else she could say; words wouldn't come. She could only look at him, drinking in his face, the shining eyes, the gladness that glowed from him to her.

"Lieutenant Hanley has had a very tough three hours," said the nurse professionally. "Getting him into a cast, and X-rays first, and he's very tired." She did not say, "You mustn't stay long." But it was there.

Judy asked her, "Exactly what—what are the injuries?"

The nurse said, "Commander Sloane will be here and you may ask him. He's on this floor, but he's right now."

When she had gone, Judy touched Jack's hand. The one that wasn't bandaged. She said, "Oh, Jack, I—I almost died! I'm so glad you're alive! I'll never, never be such a fool again. Just get well! Get well for me!"

Jack whispered hoarsely, "Do you mean it?"

"Mean it?" She kissed his fingers. "I love you."

(To Be Continued)

Lima will entertain a general conference of the American states for the first time, this honor previously having been accorded to Washington, Mexico City, Rio de Janeiro, Buenos Aires, Santiago, Havana, and Montevideo.

Sternier Realities Faced
Lima, it is apparent, is to witness the maturing of the Pan American movement, as the troubled affairs of the world at large have compelled American statesmen to grapple with realities as never before.

Delegates staying at the Hotel Bolivar may look from their balcony windows upon the heroic statue of the South American liberator, Gen. Simon Bolivar, who according to history's verdict knew exactly what to do when Europe was distraught.

Lima, called "City of Kings" by Pizarro, now boasts a population of about 500,000. From the early days of 1535 the town passed through various phases of struggle

Motorists Defeat Road Fund Abuse In Three Elections

CHICAGO.—In the wake of the recent elections comes news of importance to motorists in general. In three states constitutional amendments preventing diversion of motor revenues to non-highway purposes were decisively approved by voters.

Motorist-backed measures were successful in California, Michigan and New Hampshire. A similar proposal failed by a narrow margin in Alabama, where no broad educational program was conducted.

The New Hampshire proposal carried by a five to one vote. The Michigan amendment succeeded by a majority of at least 200,000 votes, even though three constitutional amendments on other subjects failed. The vote was roughly two to one in California.

Colorado, Kansas, Minnesota and Missouri had previously adopted amendments against diversion, so the states now protecting highway funds number seven.

Since diversion became a prac-lice, more than a billion dollars has been detoured from highway construction. The annual diversion is about $160,000,000, enough to construct approximately 5,000 miles of first-class pavement.
