Old-Fashioned Patriotism One Need of the Nation

Small-town business man sat him down the other day and tried to figure out why America is distracted and beset by its current plague of isms. Instead of blaming paid agitators from overseas, he concluded finally that the fault is our own. And he summed up his mediations in a letter which is well worth some space here.

"When I was a kid (lo, these many years ago)," he wrote, "going to school we daily saluted the flag and every morning before studies we sang 'My Country 'Tis of Thee.' We also were taught of and impressed with our national heroes, their deeds, their homes, their backgrounds,

"We committed to memory the American's Creed, the Preamble to the Constitution, the Gettysburg Address, and other historic passages. In fact, all through my school years we were taught to respect and love America and everything American. We were imbued with patriotism.

"Then there developed a laxness in these patriotic teachings . . . Perhaps the broadening of the curriculum over the past 20 years to better equip the children to earn a living on leaving school crowded out some of our teaching of patriotism. But five or 10 minutes of every school day devoted to teaching love of country would, I think, be the greatest way to fight the growth of things un-American.

The old-fashioned schoolhouse has come in for a lot of criticism lately. It was unscientific and slipshod, it stuffed its pupils' minds with facts instead of teaching them how to think, it didn't relate its teachings to the problems of present-day . . . and so on, and so on. But it did do one been elected to Congress, wh thing, as this business man points out; it did imbue its pu- he is expected to talk turkey. . . and so on, and so on. But it did do one been elected to Congress, where prizes for everybody but the Chipils with a solid, unquestioning, instinctive love of country.

And that is a virtue we should have trouble getting along without. We need the critical spirit which is willing to recognize past mistakes and solve problems by cold reason instead of by emotion, of course; but we also needand need vitally-that old loyalty and love which put the nation as a whole above any individual and above any

For there is more to patriotism than blind loyalty. It is based on an understanding that there is something unspeakably precious wrapped up in the American dream: something that men have struggled hard for and died for unhesitatingly, something that has been worth all of the blood and tears and toil that went into the building of this nation.

And a person who has that understanding will insist that today's problems be solved in such a way that those priceless elements in the American heritage are not destroyed or weakened. He will also have confidence in the faith and courage of the people as a whole, and he will know that the darkest present can be no blacker than some of the moments which that faith and courage have triumphantly passed through before.

A good deal has been said about our need for "getting down to fundamentals." Is one hopelessly old-fashioned to suggest that one of those fundamentals is simple, straightforward patriotism.

One of the easiest ways to pick up blood poisoning is to play on a field full of cinders. And dirt fields become so many beds of concrete in cold weather.

Better conditioning and training facilities also aid the cause. Boys are taught to see the trainer better to one knee, though there might not be anyone within 10 yards of him.

"Safety in football," says Dr. Eastwood, "works pretty much the same as it does any place. An ounce of prevention is worth more than a pound of cure."
