A Transportation Authority Urged Before Committee

WASHINGTON, April 14.—A federal transportation authority is necessary to keep pace with changes in the transport industry, Joseph B. Eastman, Interstate Commerce Commission member, told the senate interstate commerce committee today. Eastman said the transportation problem had become too big for the I. C. C. The committee is considering general railroad legislation with a view toward coordination of transport facilities. "This proposed federal transportation authority would have the function of planning and promoting," Eastman said. "This transport business requires constant attention. Such an authority, however, would have no power to issue orders. Orders would remain the duty of the I. C. C."

SENATE VOTES REMISSION OF STATE TAXES

AUSTIN, April 14.—Remission of state ad valorem taxes to all counties for five years beginning in 1940 was considered by the Texas Senate today after it voted the return of half of such taxes to Harris County for 10 years for flood control purposes. The Harris County remission was estimated to amount to $350,000 a year. The statewide remission would amount to approximately $9,000,000 a year. Counties would be permitted to use the money for soil conservation, flood control, drainage, reforestation or roads. To gain the remission, Sen. H. G. Nelson of Lubbock proposed to equal what was returned by the state. Sen. L. J. Sulak of La-Grange asked the senators to change this and allow a county to claim the remission if it reduced county taxes 50 per cent of the remission. The Sulak plan was given a favorable vote as an amendment to Nelson's proposal.

Barter Plan For War Materials Being Defended

WASHINGTON, April 14.—The State Department today defended the proposal to barter American wheat and cotton for strategic war materials as a plan to build up U. S. reserves of war materials without interfering with ordinary commerce. The department said that the proposal apparently had been misunderstood in some quarters, giving rise to fears that the proposed barter would upset commercial transactions and depress prices. The statement said also that some believed the proposed trade agreement's program. On the contrary, the department said, the proposed barter would be conditioned so that they would not interfere with ordinary commerce or conflict with the trade agreement program.

ROOSEVELT PROMISES AID TO NEW WORLD IN CASE OF AGGRESSION

WASHINGTON, April 14.—President Roosevelt today promised to match "force to force" against aggression in defense of the institutions or independence of every nation in the Western Hemisphere. He uttered this pledge as spokesman for the new world in a bold veto of dictatorial organization of civilization. Mr. Roosevelt spoke on Pan-American day before the governing board of the Pan-American Union. Mr. Roosevelt accompanied his pledge of force with declarations that: 1.—United States economic support will be given to any sister American republic that is brought under economic pressure. 2.—Last summer's pledge to defend the Dominion of Canada against attack from overseas still stands. 3.—The next generation will see the Western hemisphere as accessible to airplane attack as any nation of Europe now may be. 4.—The American republics therefore have a right to oppose dictatorial organization of the world.

SOVIET RUSSIA MAY LEND AID TO TWO POWERS

LONDON, April 14.—The possibility of a limited military understanding between Great Britain and Soviet Russia was hinted for the first time today after the foreign office sent special but undisclosed instructions to Sir William Seeds, the British Ambassador at Moscow. Sir William arranged to see Litvinov, the Soviet Foreign Minister, today. The British Government meanwhile was reported to have intimated to Italy that it would be forced to denounce the British Italian friendship treaty of 1928 unless fascist fighting forces began withdrawing from Spain early in May. Soviet Russia has remained the biggest question mark in the European anti-aggression front which Great Britain and France have sought to build against future totalitarian expansion by giving pledges of military aid to Poland, Greece and Romania, and by working out details of a similar pledge to Turkey. It was reported without confirmation in diplomatic circles, that Sir William would discuss with Litvinov the feasibility of an air pact with the Soviets. Official sources refused to comment and Soviet diplomats were doubtful that Chamberlain's fears of the Russian system had been sufficiently overcome to convert him to a strong collective security agreement, implemented by definite military arrangements with Moscow.

Florida Ship Canal Bill Is Reported

WASHINGTON, April 14.—The house rivers and harbors committee today reported favorably a bill by Chairman Joseph Mansfield of Texas, authorizing the construction of the $200,000,000 Florida Ship Canal. President Roosevelt recently asked the committee to authorize continuation of the construction over a 15-year period. Construction was started several years ago with relief funds, but was halted when Congress refused to appropriate additional funds. Mr. Roosevelt, in asking the resumption of construction, said the project would be commercially important and vital in national defense. He estimated tolls from the canal would pay the cost.

SERIAL STORY BORDER ADVENTURE

BY OREN ARNOLD

Yesterday Hope and Sheridan are attacked by a noise in the canyon...

CHAPTER VII "WHAT you suggest is foolish, and if you insist on it I shall scream at once, so there!"

"No! No, Betty Mary! You-sh-h-h-h! My glory, Hope!" "There's a string of 'em. They're moving on at a fast walk."

"Betty Mary—please, for the love of—"

"No! Absolutely no! If you'll both go with me, all right. I think you should, rather than face such a number of them. But to leave just one of you—no!"

The emphatic argument—in rapid-fire whistlings—was conducted as Sherry, Hope and Betty Mary crouched in the darkness behind a boulder.

"Don't you make a single noise, no matter what happens!" they repeated, and then all at once she was alone.

It was unnecessary for the two officers to discuss their own plans, even though a woman had come to disturb them. Twenty-four hours earlier they had agreed on points of attack if and when the aliens should appear in San Felipe Canyon.

By sound rather than by sight Sheridan knew that there must be at least a dozen horses coming, and of course as many men. He crouched now behind a thorny shrub, listening to the crack of leather and the breathing of animals laboring up the canyon slope.

"The shooting has ceased," she said. "Where is Mr. Starr?" His hands left her shoulders then and he stood up. "Glory, I've got work to do! SHERRY! YOU OKAY?"

CHAPTER VIII BETTY MARY JORDAN had learned to shoot when she was a teen-age girl, at the same time when she was learning to ride a horse.

She did not scream nor faint nor even try to find the sights of her pistol. She simply unholstered it, lifted it and fired, all in one precise motion.

It was Hope himself who shouted that. He had known the boulder behind which she was concealed and so knew it must be she when her gun flashed in the darkness.

"This is all—always—the payoff—Betty Mary!" Sheridan scolded it unashamed. "My God, we have to do it! But—I can't—blame the poor devils. They have so little at home. The United States is— heaven—to them!"

She was holding the Mexican's hand now, and stroking his brow ever so tenderly, trying desperately to control her own crying.

"He doesn't look criminal," Betty Mary whispered in English. "About half of them are not," Sheridan declared. "They are— just— like— wanting freedom and happiness, and a chance in life, that they can't get where they were born."

"My glory, Betty Mary!" Hope almost whispered that. "I'll have to— you saved my life— you—"

"My glory, Betty Mary!" Hope almost whispered that. "I'll have to— you saved my life— you—"

"My glory, Betty Mary!" Hope almost whispered that. "I'll have to— you saved my life— you—"

"My glory, Betty Mary!" Hope almost whispered that. "I'll have to— you saved my life— you—" to see its bulky, moving forms, but any people in it were entirely silent. They must realize, Sherry thought, that this was the precarious part of their journey. Here, or near here, they would be intercepted by officers if ever they were going to be. Sherry waited for Hope's challenge.

"HALT!" The challenge came. Ringing clear. "Manos arriba!" Hope continued, shouting in Spanish. "The first man to move will be shot. This is the Border Patrol!"

A SHOT came instantly from the caravan. Then half a dozen more. Evidently the men had been riding with weapons in hand, perhaps even cocked, here in the dangerous American canyon.

Then suddenly there was a dimming confusion of noises. Riders dismounting, lest frightened horses fall and tumble down steep rocky slopes. Snorts and stampings; a soldier rolling; a horse squealing; men shouting excitedly. More shots came quickly, too. Hope had not yet answered the shots with his own guns.

When there was a momentary lull—"Los federales aqui!" cried Sherry, roaring it loudly from within a few yards of the foreigners. "You have heard the command! We are officers of the United States. You are under arrest!"

His sudden warning from so near served to unnerve the aliens, as the officers had planned; but it did not cause them to surrender, and this verified the fact they were being smuggled over by Luis Barro. Barro dealt heavily in Chinese, Russians, and others who spoke little or no Spanish, and even the Mexican aliens he smuggled invariably were told what to expect if the Patrol accosted them.

A babble of voices mingled with other noises in the canyon now. More shots broke into the bedlam. "Let 'em have it!" Hope Kildare shouted and Sherry instantly heard and saw the flash of Hope's gun. He knew Hope wouldn't be in that spot a second later—he would fire and jump aside, lest the flash reveal him as a target—but he knew Hope's deadly rifle and pistol would stampede the caravan's horses and men.

"Lucky, I'm glad Hope's on my side!" Sherry grinned to himself there in the darkness, crouching. He lifted his own repeating rifle. Crack . . . crack . . . crack . . . crack . . . crack . . . it spoke in deadly, powerful staccato, then Sherry himself jumped aside.

He heard new screamings. He had shot at moving forms of horses. It was a hellish thing to do; he'd almost as soon crack down on a man as a horse, he was thinking. But maybe a general rush would impress the enemy and cause them to surrender to what they thought was a superior force. In any event it was a wild business, fighting here in the dark. Guns and shouts and screams echoed off the other canyon wall, bounced back and gained new volume.

"Are you all right, Hope? Sheridan!" screamed Betty Mary then. "Ah-n-n-n-h!" groaned Sherry. But he couldn't go to her now. "Yes! Lay low!"

All he could do was shout at her, and resume shooting. He knew now that he would have to shoot to kill men. Men were shooting at him, and at his friend Hope. And up there a ways was a foolish—but adorable—girl. Again Sherry lifted his powerful rifle.

BETTY MARY never knew how long the battle lasted. It seemed to her that she lay in her blankets for centuries. When she could stand it no longer she got up and called and had a reassuring answer. Then for another century she crouched on hands and knees, head down as if she were a Mohammedan at prayer.

She heard men calling, screaming, shouting, between the shots. She was scared, badly. She soon realized, from his voice, that Sheridan Starr was trying to cut off the men's escape back to Mexico by working down canyon behind them and firing fast. His tactics sent the aliens scattering up hill to the eastward, some within a few yards of her as she huddled there in terror.

She stood up beside the rock and when she did so she instantly saw Hope Kildare silhouetted near her on the east ridge, fighting hand-to-hand with somebody.

She knew it was Hope because he wore the unmistakable stiff-brimmed hat of the Border Patrol, much like an army hat, and she was close enough to see his familiar form. In that instant, too, she saw a second alien top the ridge and pause right behind him.

When this second man raised a rifle—probably empty now—to crash clublike down on Hope Kildare's skull, some latent power brought life to Betty Mary Jordan. Without consciously willing it at all, she unholstered her own pistol, raised it and fired.

Bride System Is Modernized For Lonely Japanese

TOKYO — The "picture bride" system, which provoked censure in the United States when Japanese brides were selected through brokers from photographs sent from the homeland, still survives but with a number of modern variations.

One of the newer developments is the "picture husband" method of bringing couples together. Motaro Tsuji, manager of the Amazonian Industrial company in Brazil, reported that 30,000 of the 200,000 Japanese colonists in South America want to marry. He asked for an initial shipment of 30 brides and supplied pictures and records of the prospective husbands.

Mrs. Toyo Honda, director of the bride's school under the management of the Women's Auxiliary of the Meguro police station, opened a training course for the Brazil brides. Fifty girls were enrolled on the theory that some of them would withdraw before completing the four-months' course.

The "picture bride" practice was attacked in the United States on the ground that it was conducive to immorality. Many of the girls who thought they were going to the United States were going to prostitution. Melodramas were written on the subject.

The exclusion act of 1924 stopped the practice so far as the United States was concerned, for no more Japanese were permitted to enter.

In everyday matchmaking in Japan, photographs usually are exchanged at the first meeting of the "go-betweens." A girl might be working as a housemaid in Tokyo, while her parents in Kagoshima, nearly a thousand miles away, arranged her marriage with a nearby farmhand.

Occasionally parents with an unattractive daughter would brood the photograph of a good-looking cousin to make a match. Other deceptions crept in. It was formerly the practice to use pictures of the head and shoulders. But after a few anticipatory husbands found they had contracted to marry girls with a leg or foot missing, full-length photographs were insisted upon.

GORMAN VISITORS. Deputy Sheriffs Tag Underwood and L. A. White were business visitors Friday in Gorman.

WRITER'S LUCK PILES UP. PASADENA, Cal.—Mrs. Barbara Miller Smales, poet and writer, recently realized the superdream of every writer. She received in one day acceptance of six manuscripts from various magazines and publications. To cap the climax, they were all the manuscripts she had out at the time.

Three men vanish from the streets of Paris, a woman goes to prison—and the Russian colony tells a strange story of stealthy plots, abductions and betrayals

WEIRD MYSTERY of the MISSING CZARIST EXILES

MANY are the mysteries hidden by the dark streets of Paris . . . mysteries of medieval times, of the days of the Grand Monarque, of the Revolutionary Terror, of the modern underworld.

But none of them is deeper or more eerie than the one which the Paris police have just spent 15 months trying vainly to solve—the queer, shadow-haunted mystery of the missing Russian exiles.

Its chief characters have vanished. Some of them, almost certainly, are dead—although how and where they died, and who brought death to them, are things no one knows. Others are in prison. Still others have simply disappeared.

And the one person who might have cleared up the mystery has just gone into a French prison to begin serving a 20-year term at hard labor . . . and she says nothing, aside from insisting tearfully that she "never did any harm to anyone."

This person is Madame Najda Skobline, wife of a former White Russian army officer, and once famous all across Europe as La Plevitkaia, concert singer and ex-favorite of the last Czar of Russia.

She was sentenced to prison just recently after a Parisian jury had convicted her of complicity in the kidnaping of General Eugene de Miller, former leader of the White Russian colony in Paris. The kidnaping was supposed to have been engineered by her husband, General Nicholas Skobline, who was also prominent in the White Russian colony. It took place on Sept. 22, 1937, and neither General Miller nor General Skobline has been seen since.

To get an idea of what the case is all about, one must first know a little something about the White Russians in Paris.

A "White" Russian is, of course, a Russian who opposes Communism and hopes to see the Russian monarchy restored. The Paris colony is largely made up of exiled noblemen, Czarist army officers and government officials, and the like. Most of these people are desperately poor. The money and jewels they brought out of Russia with them have long since been used up; former generals, barons, cabinet members, baristers, they make their living in Paris by a variety of incongruous occupations. Many of them are taxi drivers.

Anyhow, the White Russians of Paris spend a great deal of their spare time talking over the good old days in Russia and making elaborate and quite futile plans to restore those good old days. Because of these plots, the colony's activities are matters of considerable interest to the Soviet government. Red Russia speaks of the White Russians with contempt, but it keeps tabs on them; and, naturally, any White Russian who falls into the hands of the Central figures of the mystery were General Skobline, below, his wife, La Plevitkaia, a glamorous dancer, and General Miller, right.

Soviet government promptly vanishes from sight and stays vanished.

So the White Russian colony is honeycombed with Red Russian spies and agents; and the chief of these agents is supposed to have been none other than the distinguished ex-Czarist general, Nicholas Skobline.

Skobline had been under suspicion, off and on, among the other Russians in Paris for some time before General Miller's disappearance. Away back in 1930, General Miller's professor as head of the colony, General Alexandre Koutieff, disappeared—and it was widely rumored that Skobline knew more about the affair than he was telling. In 1935, a White Russian "court of honor" convened to hear formal charges that Skobline was an agent of Moscow. Skobline appeared before it, made a spirited denial, and was exonerated.

But the circumstances of General Miller's disappearance left no one with much doubt that Skobline was deeply implicated in the plot. General Miller had a date with some other ex-officers on the evening of Sept. 22, 1937. When he failed to show up they went to look for him. They found no trace of him, but they did find a note he had left for them in his office. It read:

"I have a rendezvous today at 12:30 with General Skobline at the corner of Jaxmin and Ruffer streets where we are to meet a German officer, who is a military attaché of one of the neighboring countries—Suzman and Herr Vepner, who is attached to the embassy here. Both of them speak Russian. This rendezvous has been arranged by Skobline. Perhaps it is an ambush, and that is why I am leaving you this note.

General Miller, it was learned, had left his office that noon to keep the appointment, and had not been seen since.

The general's friends went at once to Skobline's home and roused him out of bed. He expressed his eagerness to help them find the missing men, but said that he could not understand the note. He had made no such appointment as General Miller spoke of, he said, and had not seen the man all day.

Back to General Miller's office went the whole crowd. After a good deal of talk, General Skobline announced that he was going home to bed. He would see the men in the morning.

The night following General Miller's disappearance, a covered truck has rolled up to the wharf and four Russian sailors carried out a large box, stowed it in the steamer's hold.

ing, he added, and help prosecute the search. So he walked away—and has not been seen since.

The police were called into the investigation. They dug up a few grimly significant facts.

In the harbor at the seaport of Le Havre there was a Russian steamship, tied up at a dock and presumably waiting to load a cargo.

On the night of Sept. 23—the day following the evening of General Miller's disappearance—a covered truck had rolled up to the steamer's wharf. Four Russian sailors carried out a large box, which was stowed away in the vessel's hold. Immediately thereafter the steamer cast off her mooring lines and sailed away for Russia.

Every White Russian is convinced that General Miller was in that box—drugged, perhaps, or tightly bound and gagged. What happened to him after he was turned over to the police in Russia is not known—except in the Kremlin. Execution, probably, a prison cell at the very least.

Anyway, that was the last ever seen or heard of General Miller, and of General Skobline likewise nothing more was seen or heard. The suspicion is that he either returned to Russia or went elsewhere to continue his espionage activities.

In his absence, Mme. Skobline was arrested. She tearfully denied all knowledge of the case, but beyond that refused to say anything at all. At her trial, to which some 80 witnesses were summoned—and at which a French police detective testified that the general atmosphere of spying, plotting, double-crossing and tale-bearing in the White Russian colony was almost beyond belief—she continued to remain silent. When she was finally convicted and sentenced, she said nothing further than this:

"I am alone in the world and completely abandoned. I have no witness except God, who knows that I have loved my husband and have never done any harm to anyone."

And with that she went away to prison.

The circumstances of General Miller's disappearance recall those of the disappearance of his predecessor, General Koutieff, who vanished on Jan. 26, 1930.

A hospital orderly apparently saw the general being abducted, and did not realize until too late what it was that he was looking at. Gazing idly from a window across the street from Koutieff's home, a man saw two automobiles—a sedan and a cab—draw up in front of the door. Koutieff came out, and two men got out of the sedan and spoke to him.

He protested, and there apparently was an argument; then the men took his arms and hustled him into the sedan, which promptly drove away, followed by the taxi.

Apparently, much the same thing that happened to General Miller happened to him—forcible abduction to a Russian steamer, in which he was carried back to Russia.

At that time General Skobline and his wife offered profuse condolences to General Koutieff's abandoned wife, and vowed to do everything in their power to help solve the mystery of his disappearance. Yet the whisper that Skobline was really a secret agent for the Soviets would not down, and eventually the court of honor was convened to hear the charges. Skobline was exonerated, but the rumors were never entirely silenced.

MME. SKOBLINE—more commonly known by her stage name, La Plevitkaia—had had a colorful and eventful career.

Born in the Ukraine some 50 years ago, she had rapidly risen to the top as a concert singer in pre-war Russia, and when the war broke out she was "personal solist" to Czar Nicholas. After the revolution had upset the Czar and destroyed the careers of his personal solist, she and General Skobline drifted to the south, where General Skobline served with the White Russian army of General Wrangel. When Wrangel's attempt to upset the Soviet government collapsed, the Skoblins drifted to Paris along with many other Russian exiles, and La Plevitkaia resumed her career as a singer.

This career seems to have been a convenient cloak for her and her husband to hide behind, as they pursued their activities as spies. For if it was reported to their associates—as it often was—that they met with strange varieties of people in different European cities, Skobline was always able to say: "Ah—but my wife is a concert singer. She must mingle in all sorts of circles and meet all kinds of people." Or if people began to complain that the Skoblins had much more money than Skobline's job would account for, there was always the concert career with its fees to be used in explanation.

But whatever the Skoblins did, Paris has seen the last of them. And the dark mystery of the vanished exiles remains a mystery—one which may never be cleared up publicly.

And the world may never know how it was done, who pulled the strings—or what really happened to those three soldiers of the White Russian army, Generals Koutieff, Miller and Skobline.

Where Justice Might Beget Injustice

On Congress, and on the legislature of every state which levies an income tax, now rests a grave duty.

Each should pass laws which will guarantee that injustice shall not proceed from the new decision of the U. S. Supreme Court permitting states to tax incomes of federal employees, and the federal government to tax salaries of state employees.

For, immediately the court reversed its long-time course supporting mutual immunity from such taxes, every person affected became theoretically liable for past taxes. That is, a federal employe who paid no state income tax in 1934, because the courts then ruled that he did not have to, now becomes liable for that same 1934 tax because the court now holds that he owed it.

It is easy to see how grave injustices might proceed from strict enforcement of any such procedure. To go back as far in some cases as 12 years, and say that a citizen must pay now, today, taxes for all those years when highest authority ruled he did not owe them, would be thoroughly unjust.

The Constitution provides that no ex post facto law may be passed. That means a law may not be passed which today penalizes you for something you did yesterday but which was then quite legal. Yet it would seem that a court decision can have the same effect, making you liable today for something you did yesterday, even though the same court yesterday said you were not liable.

The remedy to prevent any such injustice seems to be for Congress promptly to pass a law exempting state employes from back taxation, and for such states to have income taxes to pass similar laws specifically exempting federal employes from similar back taxes.

General approval will probably meet the court's change of view. Good sense surely indicates that government employes, no less than the rest of us, ought to bear their share of maintaining the government. And the old objection that allowing states to tax employes of federal government agencies, and the reverse, is striking at those governments themselves, will appeal to few.

The decision is right and long-needed. But it ought not to be allowed to become an instrument of oppression in its first application.

To penalize a man today for an act which, when he did it yesterday, was perfectly right and legal, is atrocious, and both federal and state governments owe a duty to head off any such unfortunate results of an otherwise sane decision.

NEW VERSION OF AN OLD FAVORITE
Plain Prune Whip Becomes Extra Delicious Prune Out Whip

If you are a homemaker and not just a housekeeper you'll want to surprise your family with this new version of a favorite old dessert. We assure you it's be a pleasing surprise. Most people like Prune Whip. Everybody we know who has tried this Quaker Prune Out Whip loves it. That in itself is reason enough for serving it. But there's another good reason, too. By adding oatmeal to this old favorite dessert you not only add extra flavor but you add extra food value. You make it a real "health dessert." Oatmeal, you know, is nature's richest economical source of nerve-nourishing Thiamin (Vitamin B), that everybody must have for best health.

Because Thiamin is not stored in the body, new supplies are continuously needed. In addition, oatmeal adds proteins for firm muscle and those body-building minerals, iron and phosphorus.

A thrifty thought: If you happen to have oatmeal left over from breakfast, use it to make Prune Out Whip. Here's the recipe:

3 cups cooked prunes (1 lb. dried)

Western Judge Has Warning for Those Who Slap Wives

By United Press
PORTLAND, Ore.—It may be all right for a man to slap his wife in Chicago, but woe be it unto the Portland husband who dare to use those tactics.

Commenting on the recent ruling by a Chicago judge who refused a woman a divorce on grounds her husband slapped her, Circuit Judge Donald E. Long of the local court of domestic relations declared:

"I think that was ridiculous. I don't think any man has the right, because he is married, to take a possessory attitude. No man has the right to chastise his wife by personal punishment."

"I only hope that the men of Multnomah county don't subscribe to the ruling of the Chicago judge and think they can get with it in the courts here," Long warned.

A former G-man and state officer, the judge has granted divorces, most of which were contested, since taking over the court of domestic relations years ago.

Livestock Winner To Buy More Stock With His Earnings

MASON, Tex.—Twelve-year-old Oliver Grote, who walked off with the lion's share of honors with his livestock exhibits at the recent Southwestern Exposition in Fort Worth, knows what he is going to do with his winnings. He is going to use them to buy more cattle.

Oliver reaped a total of $3,438.30 in prizes and the sales of his winning animals. And now he intends to go back next year and win some more prizes.

The boy farmer's grand champion steer, "Real Prince," brought him $1,284.50, including the sale price of $1,039.50. His carload of steers, judged best in the show, brought him $280 in prizes and $1,914.75 on auction. His blue-ribbon senior Hereford steer sold for $159.05 on the auction block.

Members of the committee who were named following a tally of peace officers at Beeville, March 31, are Brown, Arnold, E. P. (Paul) Ezell, San Antone's, identification expert of the Federal Immigration and Naturalization Bureau; Chief of Police J. W. Neumayer of Yorktown, City Detective Jim J. Shown of Houston, Constable Neal Polk of Houston, and Sheriff E. D. Cartwright of Bastrop.

"The new organization is intended to weld all federal, state, district, county, precinct and municipal officers into one body," Arnold explained. "It is intended to aid in law enforcement and is not designed to tear down any other organization now in existence." A closer union and better cooperation between all law enforcement officers among the various agencies in the plan of the new federation.

• BRUCE CATTON IN WASHINGTON

BY BRUCE CATTON
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

HARRISBURG, Pa.—Two short years ago nobody presumed to discuss possible Democratic presidential nominees in 1940 without devoting a good deal of space to George H. Earle, then governor of Pennsylvania.

The Democratic party was riding high in the state. It held the governorship and one of the two senatorships, to say nothing of 26 of the state's 34 congressional seats. The governor was energetic, enormously popular, liberal, and apparently destined for higher things.

How the picture has changed! Today George H. Earle is out of the picture. The Democratic party in Pennsylvania is wrecked. Indictments are pending against its state chairman and against divers of the most prominent figures in the late Earle administration.

The Republicans rule again at Harrisburg and have 19 congressional places against 15 for the Democrats. It is an open question whether Senator Joe Guffey will be returned when his present term expires next year. Bitter internal feuds divide the party.

The catastrophe began to develop just about a year ago. Deep rivalries within the party were just beginning to come to a head. Rumors of corruption in the state administration were becoming scandalously common.

These two factors worked together. Senator Guffey and David L. Lawrence, chairman of the state Democratic committee, fell out, and the intra-party scrap became bitter as the spring primary campaign got under way.

The charges of graft and corruption began to be made openly. At last, on a sunny day in April, Attorney General Charles J. Margiotti publicly proposed a grand jury investigation of the charges. Earle promptly countered by firing Margiotti—and the fat was in the fire.

A Dauphin county (Harrisburg) grand jury was ordered to begin the investigation. Earle fought the probe in the Supreme Court, failed to squelch it, and eventually was driven to the expedient of calling a special session of the legislature, which tried to head it off by voting for a legislative investigation of the charges and ordering that no grand jury investigation could be held until after the legislative inquiry was finished. Meanwhile, Lawrence and Guffey backed separate tickets in the party primary.

So the whole squabble came out into the open, and Earle—who eventually won his party's nomination for U. S. senator—went into the campaign under a cloud. As an inevitable result, the Republicans won the election.

Then, just to make the cup run over, the Supreme Court threw out most of the program adopted at the special legislative session and the Dauphin county grand jury got busy.

Early this winter indictments started popping. On Jan. 7, Lawrence was indicted on charges of conspiracy to defraud the commonwealth, blackmail and violation of election laws. Two months later the grand jury indicted him again, this time on charges of conspiracy to assess public employes.

There, at the moment, the matter rests. Within the party a move to remove Lawrence from his position is getting up steam. Senator Guffey visited Harrisburg recently and addressed a party "harmony" meeting—and, according to reliable report, encountered fearsome heckling from disgruntled county chairmen.

The party wounds are still gaping, the tale of corruption and graft will become public in all its detail when the indicted men come to trial.

And nobody at all mentions George H. Earle as presidential timber any more.

Drought Creates Death Traps For Ducks In Canada

NEW YORK—Drought and relics of the World War wheat boom are setting hundreds of death traps for wild ducks now on nuptial flights to Canada, according to a survey by Ducks Unlimited, Inc., national organization of wildfowlers.

Innumerable marshes in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, principal breeding grounds of North America's choicest waterfowl, will dry up next summer unless heavy rains fall this spring. Canadian staff naturalists of the organization predict.

"Spring runoff from winter snows, principal source of moisture during the entire year, has been less than during past drought years in southeastern sections of the prairie provinces," H. W. Cartwright, chief naturalist, reports.

"While water prospects are better in western and northern sections, hundreds of thousands of ducklings may perish next July and August if sufficient reserve water is not forthcoming soon to carry through these normally rainless months.

"What happens is this," Cartwright declares. "Breeding ducks arriving from the United States in the spring are attracted by pools of water on marshlands drained during the World War wheat boom, found unproductive and now abandoned.

"Broods hatch in June but before they can fly all water has disappeared down the old drainage ditches and the ducklings perish by hundreds of thousands. An organized study showed such losses occurred last summer in 668 drained as well as undrained localities."

Ducks Unlimited contributed $100,000 to dam up main ditches on 168,000 acres of abandoned drainage projects and for other work during 1938. Provincial and local governments, to which most of the areas had reverted for non-payment of taxes, contributed the lands.

"To eliminate more of these Canadian duck traps this year," declares President Louis H. Barkhausen, of Chicago, "our members have launched fund-raising campaigns. With the co-operation of American duck hunters and Canadian authorities we hope to restore a half million acres and save countless more of the waterfowl."

Curiosity Brings Girl A Fellowship

AUSTIN, Tex.—When Hilda Rosene was a child she wondered why water was able to rise against the force of gravity to the tops of trees. Now she is trying to find out how much water an onion will absorb.

Probably not many people stop to wonder such things, but the Guggenheim Memorial Foundation recently awarded Miss Rosene, now an assistant professor of zoology at the University of Texas, a fellowship so she could continue her investigations.

Walks Under Ladder And Has Bad Luck

STONINGTON, Conn.—Selectman John J. Donahue never was superstitious about walking under ladders until the day he inspected the new high school.

Just as he passed under a ladder, in calm disregard for all consequences, someone opened a window on an upper floor and knocked over a can of gray paint. The can struck Donahue on the head, spilling the contents over a new blue serge suit.

He finished the inspection in borrowed clothing, giving ladders a wide berth.

Shilling Triples Self On 65-Year Deposit

By United Press

LONDON—H. C. Andrews, 79, of Chapham, has just drawn 3 shillings (75 cents) from a 65-year-old bank account, which has only one entry—one shilling.

Sixty-five years ago, when he went to sea, his mother gave him a shilling and told him to put it in the Post Office Savings Bank. He did, and forgot all about it, until recently when he read in the paper that the Post Office had about $20,000,000 in small accounts that had been forgotten.

Mr. and Mrs. Anson Richards and Mr. and Mrs. John Richards, all of Wabash, Indiana, left for their home yesterday, after a visit in the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Henderson at Olden.

Mr. and Mrs. Richards were celebrating their 50th wedding anniversary.

Lawrence Tibbett Praises Eastland Man At Audition

Maurice Harkins of Eastland, baritone, received encouragement for a musical career and commendation on his voice at an audition this week in Dallas with Lawrence Tibbett, singer of concert, opera and screen fame.

The audition given Harkins was the only one given by Tibbett during his stay in Dallas while appearing with the Metropolitan Opera company. It was arranged through correspondence by Mrs. Art Johnson of Eastland.

The audition lasted for one hour.

After Harkins sang "It Is Enough," he was told by Tibbett: "Splendid, you have an excellent voice and your interpretation is remarkable in view of the fact that you have not studied this song's traditional way of presentation; you only deviated from the standard way in one place, when you slowed it down and it should be kept at tempo." Tibbett then showed Harkins the way he would sing the number.

Clara Jane Kimble, also of Eastland, who accompanied Harkins and Mrs. Johnson, received praise for her accompaniment. She was especially praised for her playing's sensitivity.

Harkins also sang "When I Think Upon the Maidens" at the audition.

Court Says Railroad Is Boss' Of Station

ST. JOHN, N. B. —The Canadian National railways has established, in an unusual police court case here, who's to be boss of the railway stations.

Of singing Tibbett stated: "Songs are a method of communication, just as talking and the story or thought must be conveyed to the audience above all. Tibbett said Harkins had a promising musical career if he would secure proper teachers and work hard. He recommended New York City as the place to go for promising singers.

Harkins is an employee of the Texas State Employment Service in Eastland.

When loiterers made a habit of congregation in the depot and "sauced back" the C.N.R. police, telling the officers that they didn't have to move because the station was a public place, the police took a test case to court. They testified that idlers remained in the depot by the hour, comfortable reading smoking and expectorating.

The magistrate upheld the railway police by imposing a suspended term of 20 days on Charles Morris, one of the men, for using the washroom in the union depot, the accused not being a passenger or ticket holder.

Shilling Triples Self On 65-Year Deposit

By United Press

LONDON—H. C. Andrews, 79, of Chapham, has just drawn 3 shillings (75 cents) from a 65-year-old bank account, which has only one entry—one shilling.

Sixty-five years ago, when he went to sea, his mother gave him a shilling and told him to put it in the Post Office Savings Bank. He did, and forgot all about it, until recently when he read in the paper that the Post Office had about $20,000,000 in small accounts that had been forgotten.

Mr. and Mrs. Anson Richards and Mr. and Mrs. John Richards, all of Wabash, Indiana, left for their home yesterday, after a visit in the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Henderson at Olden.

Mr. and Mrs. Richards were celebrating their 50th wedding anniversary.
