Eastland County's Landlords to Name Soil Committee

Meetings to elect precinct committees to represent Eastland County in the administration of the Texas State Soil Conservation Act will be held in each precinct at 2 p. m. Monday, May 15, according to County Judge W. S. Adamson. The time and place of the four meetings was decided by the Commissioners' Court while in session Wednesday.

The Texas State Soil Conservation Act, which was signed by Gov. O'Daniel on April 24, provides that commissioners' courts shall call precinct meetings of landowners to elect committees whose duty it shall be to elect a county representative to the district conventions which will be held at Stephenville, Plainview, San Angelo, Kenedy and Crockett on May 22. The commissioner of each precinct will act as chairman at each precinct meeting. Each member so elected shall be a landowner of the precinct from which he is elected and shall be actively engaged in the business of farming or animal husbandry.

Dent Is Put Into Roosevelt Budget By New Farm Bill

WASHINGTON, May 12.—The Senate today put a record-breaking dent in President Roosevelt's budget by approving a $1,218,466,572 agriculture appropriation bill, which carried $338,000,000 in unbudgeted farm subsidies.

Named for Director of WTCC

Coal Strike Controversy Comes To End

NEW YORK, May 12.—Contract negotiators for the Appalachian soft coal industry today reached a tentative agreement on a union shop contract, with the United Mine Workers of America, and appointed a drafting committee to prepare the proposed agreement for submission to the full joint wage and hour conference this afternoon.

W. L. Robinson of Cleveland, chairman of the joint wage-hour conference which has been meeting here since March 14, made the announcement after the morning session of a sub-committee representing 2,000 soft coal operators and 340,000 miners who have been idle since April 1.

Inclusion of the union shop in the agreement removed the last point of issue which has kept the two sides from agreement for nearly two months. The negotiators had agreed on wages, hours and other clauses in the contract, but the miners insisted on their demands for the union shop.

The agreement, which was reached after the administration at Washington had intervened with the full pressure of the federal government, means that the mines in the Appalachian area will be opened Monday. It means also that a threatened nation-wide soft coal famine has been averted.

Daladier Is Given Confidence Vote

PARIS, May 12.—The French Chamber of Deputies today voted confidence in Premier Edouard Daladier's foreign policy, including his declaration that France would fight if the dictator nations challenged the security of France or her allies.

The vote was 375 to 230. The majority for the government was smaller than was expected because Leon Blum's socialist party voted against it. The socialists approved the government's foreign policy, which was the major issue, but disapproved of its internal economic and financial measures.

Admiral To Rule Over Puerto Rico

WASHINGTON, May 12.—President Roosevelt announced today he will appoint Admiral William Leahy, retiring chief of naval operations, as governor of Puerto Rico, to succeed Gov. Blanton Winship.

Leahy will retire as chief of naval operations shortly after adjournment of congress.

Mr. Roosevelt indicated his nomination would be sent to the senate soon, but that he will not assume his new post until after adjournment of congress, a date corresponding with his retirement from his naval post.

Gov. O'Daniel Signs Three More Bills

AUSTIN, May 12.—With cameras clicking and light bulbs flashing, Gov. W. Lee O'Daniel today signed three bills passed by the Texas Legislature, with supporters of the bills grouped about him.

Bills that received such display signatures were the Big Bend National Park bill, the bill to require trial of land vacancy suits in counties where the land is situated and a bill to authorize receivers for mutual aid insurance concerns when they fail to meet their claims.

Tatum Depositors To Get Accounts

Within a short time the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is expected to begin payments to depositors of the Tatum State Bank, Tatum, Texas, which closed on May 2, 1939.

The bank held total deposits of approximately $24,000 at the time of suspension and practically the entire amount is estimated as being insured. The bank had about 260 depositors at the time of its suspension.

This was the fifteenth closing of an insured bank in the State of Texas since the beginning of deposit insurance on January 1, 1934.

TAX CHANGES CHECKED BACK TO CONGRESS

WASHINGTON, May 12.—President Roosevelt reiterated today that, if congress changes the corporate tax structure it must provide revenue equal to whatever reductions are made.

Mr. Roosevelt said his position on tax revision was the same as it was several weeks ago.

He said he would not oppose congressional repeal, for instance, of the undistributed corporate profits levy, but that if this was done congress would have to provide sufficient revenue to make up the loss to the treasury. It would also, he said, be forced to devise some method to prevent legal tax evasions, which the present law is designed to curb.

The president placed responsibility for tax revision entirely on congress. He said suggestions from the treasury for various revisions should not be construed as administration recommendations. However he said that revision proposals will be presented by the treasury to the house ways and means committee soon.

27,870 Persons T.S.E.S. Visitors Since Oct., 1937

Twenty-seven thousand and eight hundred and seventy persons. That is the number of persons who have been at the Texas State Employment Service office in Eastland on business from October 1, 1937, to May 1 this year, according to a report compiled Friday by J. Syd Lopez, manager of the office. The office serves Eastland county.

The report further showed that 2,346 applications for work had been filed and that 4,745 were renewals. Through the office in the period 751 persons found work. A total of 65 veterans also received employment through the work of the agency.

A total of 10,918 claims for benefits from the unemployment compensation commission also were filed. Benefit claims from other persons totaled 487.

Franks Indicted On Murder Charge

DENISON, May 12.—Federal and state authorities today tightened their hold on 21-year-old Burton Franks, charged with the $1,572 Maypeet robbery of the First State Bank in which W. D. Wilemon, the president, was fatally shot Wednesday.

U. S. District Attorney Clyde Eastus announced that Franks, an ex-convict, would be taken from Denison to Dallas today for grand jury action on a federal bank robbery charge.

The charge was filed in Fort Worth before U. S. Commissioner Lois Newman yesterday after Franks was arrested yesterday in a Denison rooming house.

Meanwhile an Ellis County grand jury returned a murder indictment against Franks.

T. T. Horn Chosen As Fair Chieftain

T. T. Horn has been chosen president of the Dan Horn Community Fair association, it was announced today. He was elected Wednesday night at a meeting in the community.

Members of the association voted to hold the annual fair September 1 and elected J. G. Stuteville vice president and Mrs. N. J. Tarver as secretary.

Charlie Ross Found at Last?

Court jury confirms claim of Gustav Blair, lower, 69-year-old carpenter of Phoenix, Ariz., that he is long missing Charlie Ross, son of prominent family, kidnaped from Germantown, Pa., home 65 years ago. Blair filed suit to establish identity with other members of Ross family. Top photo shows Charlie Ross as he appeared when abducted.

Reorganization Order Approved

WASHINGTON, May 12.—The senate today approved, without debate, President Roosevelt's government reorganization order, No. 2, which includes abolition of the National Bituminous Coal Commission and transfer of its functions to the secretary of interior.

The order was approved by a voice vote. The senate action precludes any possibility of a congressional veto of the order, which now automatically becomes effective July 9.

Event Is Completed

The Chamber of Commerce at Eastland announced Friday that a sign painter has completed work on a sign which will be used on the lead car of an Eastland county section in the parade at the West Texas Chamber of Commerce convention Tuesday in Abilene. The convention is from Monday through Wednesday.

The sign, advertising the Texas Peanut Festival to be held at Eastland during the annual county fair Sept. 28-30, reads:

TURKEY SIGNS A PACT WITH DEMOCRACIES

Turkey today entered the European anti-aggression front in the adherence of Soviet Russia appeared probable before the end of May.

British Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain announced the agreement with Turkey in the house of commons.

For the time being Britain and Turkey agreed to cooperate in event of war in the Eastern Mediterranean. That means that they would fight if their interests are endangered by fascists or armed forces, either on the Mediterranean or on its coasts, where military experts believe that the first phase of any future European war will be fought. Indirectly the agreement is designed to strengthen the security of both the Balkans and Egypt.

It also means that the Dardanelles will be kept open so that assistance may be carried to Poland and Rumania, if necessary, by the ships of Britain and France, which also will be a party to the accord with Turkey.

Meanwhile Japan was putting pressure on British, French and American interests in the Orient. Japanese naval men occupied the foreign areas of the big South China port of Amoy and a spokesman said that they might find it necessary to occupy the foreign area of Shanghai, the control of which they now share with the United States, England, Italy and France.

Information Sent On Gunsight for Book On Towns

Complying with a request of Mrs. Lena Russey of Los Angeles, Calif., Justice of Peace E. E. Wood of Eastland has sent her information on Gunsight, community in Stephens county.

Mrs. Russey wrote that she was collecting descriptions of towns in the United States with odd names. She also stated that she contemplated publication of a book with the information.

Through H. J. Tanner, secretary-manager of the Chamber of Commerce at Eastland, information is also to be supplied Mrs. Russey on Eastland and Eastland county.

Splendid Crowds Continue To Go To Christian Revival

Another good crowd was present at the Christian Church protracted meeting last night when Rev. McKisick preached another splendid sermon.

Though the storm came up right in the middle of the meeting, Rev. McKisick kept right on preaching until he finished his sermon, when one man came forward and placed his membership with the church.

Bill Carlisle will meet with the children at 4 o'clock this afternoon. He is proving to be a great director of children's work and is leading the choir in a great way.

"Don't miss any of these services," Rev. H. B. Johnson, pastor of the church, urged today. "The largest attendance in the Bible School is expected for Sunday. Rev. McKisick is a splendid evangelist and is thoughtful and logical in the presentation of the scriptures. You would appreciate these services. Come and hear him."

What War Does to Freedom

The decision of the British to train a conscript army instead of relying on their traditional volunteer force is of the greatest importance to every lover of freedom.

It shows, better than anything else has recently shown, what a war does to freedom. It shows that men can never be truly free as long as they live under war or the shadow of war.

Chamberlain had promised "no conscription in peace time" to the supporters in British labor circles. The only explanation of this broken pledge is that "these are not in any true sense peace times."

That is ingenious, but it has some sense, too. For Europe is not really at peace today. The war that is going on there simply has not yet reached a point of actual armed conflict. But it is not peace.

War today is something different from war down through all its sickening 5000-year history. Just as invention has changed the face of the world more since 1900 than in hundreds of years before, so war today is a different thing than ever before.

"Totalitarian war," that is, a war which absorbs and demands every ounce of strength, every minute of thought, every penny of money, every drop of blood of every citizen, is a development for which the World War showed the way, but which the next war will bring to full bloom.

The horror of it is that once one powerful country or a group of them sinks to this level, all others are dragged down with it. So traditionally-free Britain still sings "Britons never will be slaves," but pays the price that "Britons must be soldiers."

British organized labor views with distrust this move. For a body of labor that is also a body of army reservists is never quite free.

In France they recently found that out. In the face of the German crisis, Communist leaders of the railway unions insisted on a general strike. It was no time for it, for no country can afford to have its defenses stripped bare in the face of the enemy. So the strikers were all simply called into active army service, breaking the strike and almost breaking the unions.

Thus it is that militarism is able to break down the liberties of free men even without war. The coming of war itself will make that triumph absolute. Then men will have to fight back through the chaos of war-wreckage and perhaps even civil war, to the liberties they once had, and did not know enough to keep.

CHAPTER I

DUKE MARTIN'S apartment, like himself, possessed the insidious charm of easy spending, of good living. Yet few knew how well the Duke lived. Only a handful of the people who swarmed into the Dove, the night club he owned with Nick Hart, on E. 53d Street, had ever been to Martin's hide-away on the 45th floor of a New York skyscraper. Those who got in enjoyed the fragrance of exotic flowers, thick carpets, low lights, heavy silk hangings, satiny-covered couches, and a buffet which displayed the best brands. But no one ever entered the Duke's apartment without paying in the peculiar coin he demanded.

In his bedroom this evening two men looked on while he eyed himself thoughtfully in a full-length mirror. Critically, he studied the line of his midnight blue Tuxedo, the knotting of his black tie, the patent leather sleekness of his dark hair and the magnificence of the star sapphire on his little finger. The Duke was big, almost too big for his clothes. You could see his muscles flex, then bulge, as he moved his arms, but his movements were graceful. No awkwardness here. Sinister strength, heightened by a pale skin and the solid black eyes.

Whatever the others thought, the reflection in the mirror did not meet with his approval.

"You're not doing so well, Bill," He spoke sullenly to his valet. "I look too new."

Bill Condon mumbled, "Honest to God, Duke, this business has got me. Just because I look like a Jewee doesn't mean I've got the soul of a fellow that knows ties and collar buttons. Put me back on the camera. Why, a fellow's liable to wind up cuttin' paper dolls if he follows this racket!"

Bill had the features of an English aristocrat, (there was a good deal of speculation as to where he got them), a soft heart and a hand with a hard right punch. Even though his devotion to the Duke brought him into contact with Society, he still thought anyone who stepped on the East side of Fifth Avenue was a stray. He came from Hell's Kitchen.

NICK HART yawned. "Quit gawking Duke of Windsor, on us, Martin. Them Park Avenue guys will like you better if you drop the swank rags and be yourself. He drew his 200 pounds up. "Now look at me. They take me as I am, a big hunk of good-natured fat from Hell's Kitchen. Not to change the subject, I think I gotta idea!" The Duke smiled sarcastically.

"What about servin' 'em old bootleg in fancy brand bottles?" Martin snapped at him. "For God's sake, quit being a nickel and dime thief. We serve the best, charge the most and make it hard as the devil to get in. I want Park Avenue in the joint, not the firmen from the sticks."

He was interrupted by the ringing of the apartment buzzer. All three men faced the door, Bill and Nick put their hands on their hip pockets. "It's your job to answer doorbells, Bill," said the Duke. "Step on it."

A wave of expensive French perfume floated through the apartment as Bill opened the hall door.

All three men faced the door, Bill and Nick put their hands on their hip pockets.

With it came the gushing tones of a woman, the tinkle of bracelets and the rustle of silk. Nick smiled and waved a pudgy hand. "Enter Mrs. Mortimer Ruth-erford Thompson. The Fro of the Four Hundred. Knows how to sit down, how to stand up, how to smoke a cigaret, what to do with your knife and fork and will teach others at $100 per."

"Oh, Mr. Martin, are you ready for your lesson? I'm so thrilled to be here." Tuckie Thompson swished in. "I'm not standing on ceremony. I know you need me." "That's what I got you for, Tuckie," said the Duke, "to tell me and my night club where to get off." His mouth twisted into a smile, but his eyes were cold and hard. "Sit down."

TUCKIE perched herself on the Duke's taffeta-draped bed. A glittering nitwit, the redness of her thin lips emphasized the ashiness of her blond hair. She glanced archly at the Duke. "You have possibilities," Mr. Martin. "I felt that the moment we met."

Her face, though long, like a sheep's, and with something of the expression of extreme alienation, she had the quick movements of a bird, every one of them emphasized by numerous dangling bracelets. The most remarkable thing about her was this perpetual motion. If her hands were not fluttering, her ear-rings were swaying back and forth, like the pendulum of a cuckoo clock, or her china blue eyes darting aimlessly, or her foot tapping, or her shoulders moving upward in a shrug.

"Sure I have possibilities," said the Duke, "but I want to know, what's wrong with this coat, I paid enough for it, but it don't seem to have tone."

"It fits too well," said Tuckie critically. "Now my third husband, his mother was a Rutherford, you know--"

"Never mind the Rutherfords," broke in the Duke. "I want to know what's wrong with me." "Tuckie jumped up. "Come!" She took the Duke's hand and started to lead him toward the bathroom, her shining satin gown trailing regally.

Yesterday, Duke Martin, winning the social approval of Tuckie Thompson, steps out into Park Avenue for the evening, his dress revolver in his pocket.

CHAPTER II

UNLESS you belonged to the initiated you might think the Dove night club was just another brownstone front on a quiet block, but if you happened to be on East 53d Street this stormy spring night, you could see, even through the misty rain, that the house was playing a new role. Every window gleamed with lights. A footman, dressed in expensive livery, balanced himself at the curb, bracing his body against the wind and sleet while he directed a long line of cars as they paused to deposit customers.

Admission was by card only. Tuckie Thompson had scanned the Duke's list well. The crowd looked like a first night at the Opera. But there was no similarity in the entertainment.

At the end of the silver hall on the ground floor, a girl in a saucy singlet sang songs. Her voice was husky and deep. There was a pounding on tables. Straining against a red velvet rope which had been strung across the entrance were more people.

The Duke presided at a table close to the dance floor. Nick hovered near the entrance while Tuckie fluttered among people, gurgling whenever she saw a familiar face.

"Bargie, darling! This is too delicious--" she twittered up to an oldish, bald-headed person.

But Tuckie's sentence was never to be finished. With the rest of the crowd she had turned toward the door to see who had the nerve to force Pasquale to let down the bars.

A DARK-HAIRED girl walked slowly in. She had splendid brown eyes, short, curly brown hair and a red mouth that quirked up humorously. Her white dress was close-fitting and in her hair was a pink rose.

"Who is she?" The couple with whom the Duke had been sitting was curious. "Pretty, but shy." The Duke smiled. "That's her front. Nothing shy about her when she's working. She's the best society editor in New York. Has the low-down on everybody here. How's that for a build-up, Miss Franklin?"

"You always say the right thing, Mr. Martin." He bowed her to a table, overtly polite to this woman of position and positive power, knowing the Gazette was right there in his club. Another bottle of champagne was called to a waiter. The girl had a quiet manner. But when you came to know her you were surprised to learn how determined she could be. Born in Virginia, she had come to New York as a child, gone to a fashionable school and traveled abroad. This came to an abrupt end when her father died. Her style caught the attention of an editor. He gave her a job on the Gazette. Three years later she was Society Editor. Now, with an unlimited acquaintance and a gift for getting out difficult news, she was a person to be considered and also to be feared.

"Mary, dearest!" Tuckie rushed up. "You're the only one in New York for whom Pasquale would let down the velvet rope. I worked weeks over this list. I'm a wreck!" Tuckie sank in a chair. "Everybody in the world who matters is here!"

"Including Janice French?" "Why she must be."

Mary looked at the Duke. "Have you seen Janice tonight?" "That tongue of yours?" Mary's smile at Martin's irritation didn't help his temper. She leaned toward Tuckie. "Hop along child. The Van Zants have just come in for their Friday night soupy. I'll say hello to Jim Shirley in a minute."

Mary turned back to the Duke. "Where is Janice?" "I don't know."

She rose. "You can't kid me, Duke. I stay up all night too. Janice has been partying a dozen times with you the last month, Goody."

She walked toward the door, stopping as she went, at a table where two men were sitting. "Both got to their feet. "I hope you're going to take pity on us," exclaimed the older man. "Jim and I have been wishing you'd join us."

Mary shook her head. "If I only could, Mr. Robinson. I have to go back to the office and write." She paused. "Have either you or Jim Shirley seen Janice French tonight?"

Thomas Robinson stared. "No. But why do you ask? You know her father is a client of mine." "I'll tell you another time," called back Mary over her shoulder.

There was an ugly humor in his face as the Duke followed her into the hall. Mary stepped into a phone booth. The Duke hurried to another. The sliding door of her booth was half open. "Rhinelander 4-7254," she said. No answer. "Try Whitehall 3-9300." She drew the door of her booth shut. "City desk?" lowering her voice. "Okay. Give me Mr. Ladd, the managing editor. Hello, Tom! This is Mary. I'm at the Dove. Janice isn't here and she doesn't answer her phone."

In the adjoining booth, the Duke jiggled the telephone hook. "Try that number again, operator," he ordered. "Rhinelander 4-7254." "Sorry, sir," said the girl after five minutes. "I get a don't answer signal!"

Mary looked at the Duke. "Have you seen Janice tonight?" she inquired. "No, but that doesn't mean she isn't around," the Duke answered.

WHEN ONE DRINK IS TOO MANY

Showing how toy balloons, speed cops and scientific laboratories were used to prove that even a little alcohol in the motorist imperils highway safety

By Bert H. Davis

"THE traffic cop's command, 'Pull over to the curb!' is losing its old-time meaning.

It won't invariably mean that a motorist is to be summoned to court.

Perhaps the officer wants his help for about three minutes. The driver will be invited to answer two or three questions—and blow up a balloon.

Then he'll go on his way, wondering what information could be collected from a balloonful of breath.

In an Illinois city, already the scene of many traffic studies, 1750 drivers had an experience like that. The balloon blowing showed that a number of them had been drinking, though not nearly so many as some students of highway safety had guessed.

From these recent tests, the men whose profession keeps American streets and highways safer learned much more about the drinking driver. They're more certain, too, of the point at which he becomes dangerous. It's been proved by this additional evidence that even one drink or two, under some conditions, makes a driver more dangerous to himself and to others.

Of course, tests that weigh and measure the alcohol in the blood, in the urine, or in the spinal fluid are not new. Evanston, Ill., is among the cities where the testing of body fluids for the presence of any considerable load of alcohol has been going on for several years. It's a common practice in several European capitals, too.

FOR three years the Evanston police have made a fluid test in every automobile accident case that was serious enough to send someone to a hospital. The cops' partners in this project were the National Safety Council, the Chicago Motor Club, and the Evanston Medical Society, with Dr. Heiman A. Heise of Milwaukee directing.

So presently there were 270 complete reports on a three-year crop of accident causers, to be turned over to the new Traffic Institute of Northwestern University. Those files went before Lieut. F. M. Kreml, director of the Institute, and Richard L. Holcomb, research director, for careful study.

Some other tests around the country have been showing that from 40 to 60 per cent of the drivers involved in serious accidents had been drinking within a few hours before the mishap. Evanston's records ran through more years and more seasons than most, and so that city's measurement of alcohol in the blood had more significance than average.

Of the 270 drivers tested after personal injury accidents, 46.6 per cent had some alcohol in the system.

Nearly one-seventh went to, or past, the 0.15 per cent line—which might be termed the "old danger line."

That is, for some years the red light against driving after drinking has been set at 0.15 per cent, if not before. When the blood was carrying that much of an alcoholic content, you couldn't be sure of safeguarding yourself or others in a speeding car or in road emergencies.

In terms of drinking, that would amount to the two- or three-hour concentration of alcohol in the blood of a 150-pound man, accustomed to drinking, who had taken perhaps six ounces of 100-proof whiskey. But the alcohol-blood effects of a certain number of drinks cannot be accurately measured by the drinker, and they'll vary even among consistent drinkers.

But even when Lieutenant Kreml and his aides knew that 46.6 per cent of the Evanston automobile accidents had an alcoholic content is going to be. But the percentages have little practical worth until we know how many drivers in the general population are drinking—and how much they're drinking."

Too often the story told by these sketches is repeated in real life tragedies. . . . A few sociable drinks. . . . One drink too many. . . . "I'm all right! I can drive." . . . Then, sudden death.

THE time was ripe for the balloon-blowing tests. A handy instrument, no larger than the camera of 10 years ago, was all ready for the new need. Dr. R. N. Harger of the Indiana University School of Medicine was prepared to put a new detection instrument into the safety arsenal of the American police.

Making the breath test: . . . The suspected drunken driver blows up a balloon. Chemical reactions indicate whether he is too intoxicated to drive.

and that 13.8 per cent of the drivers were close to intoxication when they erred, that didn't prove much.

As Research Director Holcomb said: "Those results are interesting, and they show how important the future study of the subject

Alcoholic fumes in the breath will bleach an acid solution of potassium permanganate. As soon as the first trial balloon's contents are discharged into Dr. Harger's drunk-o-meter or breath-tester, the presence of some alcohol in the breath is made known. The solution faces a little of its distinctive royal-purple hue.

When that's the case, the curbstone investigation squad tells the driver to blow up a second balloon, and those contents are saved for a more exhaustive laboratory test. You can measure the amount of alcohol in the breath by the degree of bleaching that takes place. And the scientists know that one fluid ounce of blood will contain as much alcohol as 2000 fluid ounces of breath. Translate the breath-load into blood-alcohol, and you can determine just about how sober or semi-drunk a driver is.

MORE important to the Traffic Institute men, you could now make some practical use of Evanston's three-year collection of figures on the frequency of drinking-before-driving among the accident cases.

In the 270 accidents, alcohol was at least a possible factor in 126—that is, 46.6 per cent.

But among the 1750 motorists who were pulled out of traffic to blow up balloons, only 12.1 per cent had enough alcohol in the breath to bleach the purple solution.

Eighty-eight drivers in 100 blew up the one balloon, registered "negative" (no bleach) on alcohol, and were sent on their way.

The others stayed long enough to blow up a second balloon, which would show about how much they had been drinking.

But in all 1750 there were only seven drivers who had as much as 0.15 per cent of alcohol in the blood. This was far below one per cent of the number—in fact, 0.42 per cent.

Now, 46.6 is nearly four times 12.1. It follows that the drinkers of a group, measured at Evanston, are four times as likely as the average driver to be involved in a personal injury accident. For they're four times as numerous among accident-causers than they are in the general run of drivers.

If the alcohol load comes up to 0.1 per cent, the driver indulging put himself and others a 12 1/2 times the average traffic risks.

Yet if he should go on the highway with the 0.15 danger-load of alcohol, he is on the short end of a 33 to 1 bet against safety.

But even the moderate drinkers, with less than 0.07 per cent of alcohol in the blood, showed up with a disappointing record. There were twice as many in that group in the accident group than were discovered in the all-drivers tests. Investigators were surprised.

So even an ounce or two of alcohol in the blood will frequently account for a ton or two of wreckage on the highway.

NO wonder the Committee on Tests for Intoxication of the National Safety Council comes before the public with a new and lower "tolerance level" for the driver who intends to be safe. It declares:

"Blood-alcohol concentrations in excess of 0.15 per cent should be considered as conclusive evidence of 'under the influence of alcohol' from the standpoint of car operation.

"When the level of alcohol in the blood at the time of the accident or violation is 0.15 per cent or below, the committee recommends that abnormal actions and other external symptoms of intoxication should be considered in determining whether to prosecute for driving while 'under the influence of alcohol.'"

"When the level is below 0.07 per cent, the driver generally should not be prosecuted for such a charge.

So the recent investigations into driving after drinking have reduced the safe potion for the drinking driver by half—7 parts of alcohol permissible in 10,000 of blood (0.07) instead of the old limit of 15.

By "external symptoms of intoxication," the committee refers to such matters as the appearance and behavior of the motorist in question, his ability to walk a chalk line, his accuracy of speech when words like Methodist Episcopal are rapidly repeated.

The National Safety Council devised a two-page report on the intoxication side of a driver's examination after some accident or violation has occurred. And this report gives a fair chance to the man who seems "dopey" or confused, yet has taken little if any alcohol.

"Have you recently taken insulin?" and "How many hours of sleep did you have last night?" are among questions designed to bring out the facts, whether they're favorable or unfavorable to an intoxication charge.

The fluid and breath tests are fair and even co-operative as concerns the man who looks like an alcohol-influenced driver, yet isn't.

Sometimes a driver with beer or liquor on his breath comes out of an accident dizzy and confused. The present methods of testing breath or body fluids show whether it's the bump on his head or something he drank that accounts for his appearance and condition.
