States Can Get Together if They Will

People who deplore the extension of federal power usually have trouble in answering the question: "Well, who's going to take care of those things which affect two or more states, if not the federal government?"

Offhand, one might say there was no other answer. But there is. And gradually the states are finding it in the technique of interstate agreements and joint operations.

Compacts to control sewage flow in four of the country's major river basins have either been approved or are pending today between 16 states and the District of Columbia. The Council of State Governments, that invaluable agency which is working to co-ordinate the work of states in legislative and administrative problems, reports that the valleys of the Ohio, Delaware, Potomac and Red River of the North are the major rivers affected.

Each flows through territory in many states. Clearly, each state has rights and interests. None can be selfish as its river-control measures without affecting the others. They might have all stepped aside and asked the federal government to take charge. But they did not.

Instead, they got together. Nine states are included, for instance, in the Ohio River Valley Water Sanitation compact. Indiana and West Virginia have ratified the agreement. It is pending in Illinois, New York, and Pennsylvania. Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee and Virginia are the other states affected. The agreement becomes operative when five states have ratified.

North and South Dakota and Minnesota have approved a compact for pollution and conservancy control of the Red River of the North. The Delaware basin is already under joint control of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Delaware.

For many years the Port of New York Authority, a joint creation of New York and New Jersey, has handled a vast business in connection with navigation between these states, and handled it effectively and well. It is gradually "paying out" both states on the money they entrusted to it.

Possibly one reason for federal "encroachment" on such fields is the general helplessness of the states themselves. They forget their sovereignty except for oratorical purposes.

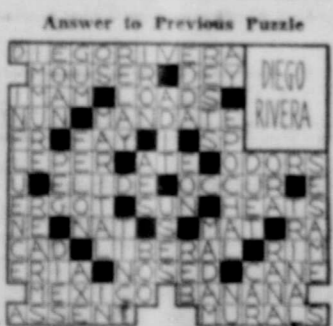

It is when states step up and demonstrate their ability to grapple with their problems that the cry for federal aid dies down.

Pennsylvania has put through an anti-fireworks law. A safe law—for the administration. Kids can't vote.

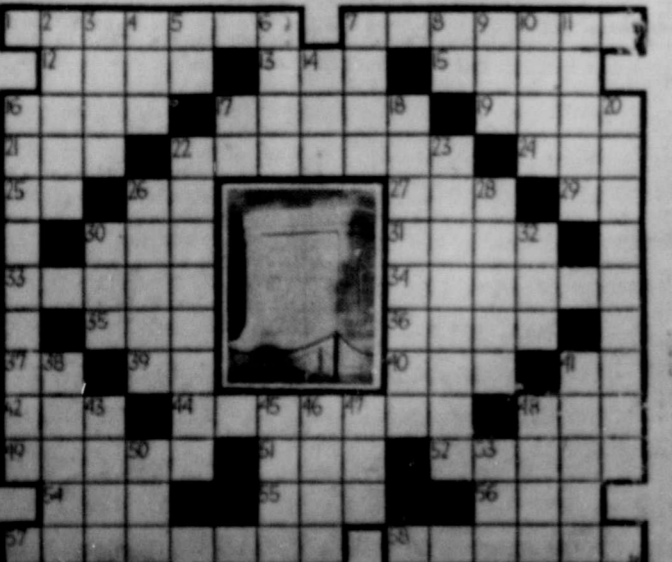

Spurred by the Pulitzer prize play, movie studios are rushing pictures on the life of Lincoln. Imagine the sight of three Lincolns eating lunch together at the Brown Derby.

OUT OUR WAY by Williams

BRIDE ON A BUDGET BY JANET DORAN

CHAPTER I AT first, when she saw the powder blue gabardine suit, Iris did not think about Bart Whitaker. At first, there was just the shop window and the suit with the rich, gleaming strand of mink fur flung carelessly over one shoulder and the long suede gloves on the floor nearby. The suit did something to her. Crystallized a desire that had lain dormant, threading its way through so many things she had done up to now. The Iris remembered Bart. She had to do something about Bart, really. She had tried everything, done everything—still they were about where they were a year ago. Business was bad. Bart was cautious, thrifty and too proud to marry when she felt he couldn't support a wife. "I'll take it with me, thanks," Iris told the salesgirl. And the little blue book in her purse said, "cash $15, balance due, $65, payments weekly." Everyone knew Iris Ives, knew she worked in the dean's office, and was the best-dressed girl on the campus, the most popular. Few remembered that she had been the best-dressed girl in 1931, or that she was the belle of Fraternity Row, that year, though. Only Iris, and a tiny calendar in her bedroom, knew that. By the time she had discovered the tailored linen blouse with the French cuffs, the alligator pumps, and the pinel purple, the weekly pay checks of Miss Iris Ives were being sent to her in a cardboard box. By then, Iris didn't care. By then, she was sure, Bart would change his mind. The suit would do that. "You ought to model, Miss Ives," the salesgirl had flattered her, when she tried on the suit. Secretly, Iris had always thought she should too. But models led precarious lives, and a private secretary, while not getting anything glamorous in the way of salary, did have a definite sum to depend on each week. "Do you budget, Miss Ives?" the salesgirl went on. Iris nodded. She honestly believed she did. She honestly believed this was the trick in looking like a debutante, on a private secretary's salary. At least, she thought her clothes in budget shops, agreed to pay so much a week, and because she was a living, lovely advertisement for the clothes, was able to explain, prettily, to credit managers, why this week's installment would have to go over until next week, because she had to go to the dentist. (Or the doctor, or pay her insurance, of which there was none, or anything else that occurred to her at the time as suitable explanation for robbing Peter to pacify Paul.) THAT night, there were many new things in the little two-room apartment where she invited Bart for Saturday supper. There was the deep lounge chair she bought because Bart liked to read the paper while she prepared the food she had purchased from Mrs. Kemble's home kitchen shop. There was the smoking stand, and both would cost her but a dollar a week, and the set of glazed blue pottery dishes included as premiums with the bargain chair. There was the food—temptingly old-fashioned home-cooked baked beans from a huge crock Mrs. Kemble cooked each Saturday, and hot crisp rolls, and brown bread. There was the salad Iris assembled from lettuce, halves of canned pears and pineapple rings, and a jar of Mrs. Kemble's homemade salad dressing. There was the steak, and a strawberry shortcake, because it was late May and berries were in from Florida, and a box of prepared shortcake biscuits required only a bit of milk, and a hot oven to transform it into a delectable dessert. But the steak was the main item. Even Bart raved about it. "Good steak feed costs you $1.50 apiece, these times; and you cook one for a fraction of that, Iris. I don't see how you do it." Iris never told him. Bart was a bound for figures and if he knew how much those Saturday suppers cost her, there'd be a riot. Too, he thought she cooked the things herself. STILL it was worth it. Bart had been coming along fine. And he was by far the most attractive man she had ever known. Though he hadn't reached the point yet wherein he realized the value of dressing to look the part of a successful, rising young business man. "What for, Iris?" he argued, when she mentioned a sale on men's suits once. "Why should I mortgage my future just to keep up with the Joneses? This suit is good enough for me—had it three years now, and there's still plenty of good wear left in it. A man has to think of his business these days." So he hadn't bought the suit. But secretly, Iris speculated on what she could do to improve him. He was really quite handsome. Not quite so tall as some of the glam boys she had known from Fraternity Row, but well-built. A sturdy, dependable young man, Bart Whitaker. Ambitious, thrifty. A good catch. And when a girl was sliding into her 26th year, she had to consider such things. THE evening paper was folded on the smoking stand, and Iris stood behind the new chair, wearing the new slipper satin house coat that slipped to the very floor, and made her waist look not an inch more than 20 inches. Bart swung open the door and grinned. "Hi, honey," he greeted her. Not noticing the new housecoat which had cost $11, and was palest lilac satin with a sash of deep royal purple, noticing only the new lounge chair, so deep and inviting and comfortable looking. And the paper on the smoking stand. "Hey, what is this, a wifely touch? Or do I notice a little soul comfort offered the tired business man?" "G o o f," Iris chuckled, but

Then she remembered Bart. She took the suit, so much down, so much a month.

CHAPTER XXV "I'VE just heard of your arrest," Ladd protested, leaning on the police commissioner's desk. Mary's eyes flashed. "You've just heard of my arrest. You've probably arranged the whole thing. I haven't worked for you for nothing." Her voice broke. She buried her face in her hands. Ladd bent forward. Fenelon cleared his throat and turned his back. Someone knocked. They all jumped. The commissioner's assistant looked in. "Mr. Jack Burden," he said noncommittally. Jack, hair ruffled, eyes bloodshot, and clothes wrinkled, burst into the room, clutching a rumpled copy of the Gazette. "This isn't true," he shouted, pointing to the headline. "I killed Martin and I'm glad of it." Ladd and Fenelon exchanged glances. Mary's own expression cleared as she realized what was happening. "Well, aren't you going to do anything about it?" demanded Jack hysterically. Fenelon gave him a quick look. "Take it easy, boy," his voice was kind. "We'll have to have some proof of this first." There was a commotion outside the door. It swung violently open. Clem Shirley pushed past a protesting officer. "I heard that," she cried. "You can't arrest him. He didn't commit the murder. I did it." She waved a copy of the Gazette under Fenelon's nose. "This is all a lie. Mary Franklin had nothing more to do with Mr. Martin's death than you have. He was a snake and I killed him with his own revolver!" The commissioner listened gravely, nodding, sympathizing, as he heard both confessions. Then calling into his telephone, he said, "Bring in Bill Condon." CONDON, Martin's butler-valet, was pushed in by two cops without any pretense of tenderness. "Who killed Martin?" asked Fenelon coldly. Condon focused on Jack. "There's the killer," he howled. "Don't lie to me," said the commissioner. "You probably killed Duke yourself." After a few similar questions and incidents, Condon began to get wise. "Why, Commissioner, I wasn't even in the joint when the Duke kicked in," he whined. "Take him out," ordered Fenelon. Still whining, Condon was led away, his mouth twisted in a snarl. The commissioner turned to Jack. "What motive would you have for killing Martin?" Jack hesitated. If he mentioned Clem it would involve her. "I guess—I guess—I didn't know what I was doing, sir." Fenelon smiled. "And you, Miss Shirley, what motive would you have for shooting Duke Martin?" Clem pushed back her chair with a weary hand. "I'm so befuddled I can't think. But I do know that neither Mary nor Jack did it—the Gazette was all wrong about Mary." Mary looked at Ladd. He did not meet her gaze. She turned to Fenelon. "I saw Duke Martin after they had left. He was as alive as you." "Did you kill him?" asked Fenelon skeptically. "So the Gazette claims," said Mary, again looking at Ladd. "WHERE'S the gun?" demanded the commissioner. No one had seen any gun. Then they'd all seen it, but no one could produce it. "I think you can go, Miss Franklin," interrupted the commissioner. "And you'd better take your young friends with you." "But if we're all set free," asked Mary, "who really did the killing?" "Person or persons unknown." Alone with Ladd, he opened a humidor. "These are very good Havanas, Tom," he remarked. Ladd lit his cigar. "That Shirley girl's a lot better than I thought. She wanted to save young Burden. How do you suppose it happened?" "She was going with Martin a little, wasn't she?" "Yes." "That's simple enough. The boy was jealous. She went to Martin's place. He followed. Mary trailed them." "I can understand that," drily commented Ladd. Fenelon eyed him steadily. "Personally, I believe Burden shot Martin with that revolver the Duke used to carry around. Martin never stirred without it, but he didn't have it on when my men searched his body. The case is closed as far as I'm concerned. There's nothing else to do. With Mary and Clem and young Burden all lying to save each other we'd never get a case against any one of them that would stand up in court." "How about Condon?" asked Fenelon. "Condon is scared of the chair for the Janitor murder—it was murder, mister, missioner went on. "Well, questioning him since the killing was discovered told us everything. I state's evidence to send him up for 20 years, and Con will be lucky if he gets with 10. There's an old peal gang killing an officer, about Condon, too. "We've spread the word in the underworld by groups in Bolivia. I Condon shot his boss. The witness is inside prison walls. More the set of friends as well as University. Research Finds Cats And Dogs Equal In Their Mentality

CINCINNATI, O.—The only difference in the intelligence of a dog and a cat is that a dog is "something of a socialist while a cat is an individualist," according to Dr. Charles M. Diserens, assistant professor of psychology at the University of Cincinnati here.

Dr. Diserens, who has made a life-long study of cats, says that persons who favor dogs over cats or who believe dogs have a higher degree of intelligence just don't know their cats. He believes one animal is about as intelligent as the other and that there is little difference in their nerve centers.

Although classifying cats as rugged individuals, Dr. Diserens wants it understood that felines have a genuine capacity for gratitude. He says this fact may often be noted during and after medical treatment, when they become deeply grateful and very often more affectionate.

Some cats are aggressive, some are lazy; some like to fight, some avoid scraps; some appear to think philosophically and some think practically, Dr. Diserens says, but all display individual personalities as distinct as those of humane beings, he added.

Coke Stevenson Still Likes Ranches

AUSTIN, Tex.—La. Gov. Coke Stevenson of Junction is proof of the saying that you can transplant a rancher but not his love of ranching.

When sheep shearing time arrived on his ranch, the lieutenant governor left Austin and went home to supervise the job.

Most of the senators put on glasses to see at a distance. Stevenson takes his off, except when reading. He's used to range distances.

But his love of a "home on the range" was shown most strikingly when the usual presentations were made as the session of the Texas Legislature neared an end.

Expensive and handsome traveling cases were presented both to him and to Mrs. Stevenson. Then came a present from the Senate porters. It was a bride. Stevenson opened it, hung it over the edge of his desk and inspected it carefully. "That's a good bride," he pronounced.

It is hand toled to match a saddle given Stevenson by members of the House of Representatives when he retired as speaker of the House. With the new gift went the same suggestion: "Ride into the governor's office."

Many think Stevenson will follow the suggestion.

Study Started To Find Power Loss In Plane Engines

NEW YORK—Prof. George B. Karelitz, of Columbia University hopes to increase the power of airplanes by investigating the physical phenomena that takes place between two rubbing surfaces at high pressures and high temperatures.

Karelitz has been examining the surface phenomena on worn parts of machines and by measuring the surfaces of worn metals to a depth of one-thousandth of an inch he seeks to determine the differences between soft metals such as bronze and hard metals such as steel with respect to changes caused by wear.

"In the near future information should be obtainable which will allow a speeding up of high pressure machines," he said. "Engineers will immediately incorporate the findings into machine designs and continue research on the new problems which inevitably arise from such modifications."

The performance of rotating machinery, Karelitz said, depends entirely upon the reliability of a steady film of oil from one to several thousandths of an inch thick separating the surfaces of a bearing from the shaft that runs in it.

"This clearly demonstrates the importance of a smooth surface as is possible," he said, "since it means that imperfections which are one thousandth of an inch above the 'ideal' surface of the bearing or journal do not receive the benefit of the lubricating medium."

Senators Come In For Some Kidding By Other Members

AUSTIN, Tex.—Sen. L. J. Sulak of LaGrange, who is a newspaper publisher with papers at LaGrange and Yoakum, was given the honorary degree of Doctor of Law by St. Edwards' University, where he delivered the commencement address this year.

Fellow senators at once began to call him "doctor" and "judge." Sen. Weaver Moore, attorney of Houston, referred to "Doctor Sulak" during a filibuster speech.

Senator Sulak quickly replied: "They considered making me a doctor of medicine but feared I might try to practice and kill somebody, so they decided just to make me a doctor of laws on the worst I could do would be to skin somebody."

The senate, 27 of whose 31 members are lawyers, quit kidding Sulak about his degree.

Sen. Wilbourne Collier of Eastland also received some good-natured kidding by his colleagues as the session neared an end. Collier is chairman of the rules committee and has felt it his duty to "clarify" the rules on numerous occasions when members disputed the proper procedure.

Moore dubbed Collier "the great clarifier," and predicted he would be known in history by that title as William Jennings Bryan became known as "the great orator" and Henry Clay "the great compromiser."

By consistently arresting World's Fair nudist authorities may finally induce visitors to look at the trylon and perisphere, after all.

Interest Continues In Calvary Revival

The old time revival meeting continues at Calvary Baptist with unusual interest, good crowds and a fine spirit.

The greatest crowd of the week was present last night to hear the pastor preach on "Punishment That Comes To One Who Doesn't Win Souls."

Twenty-five people surrounded definitely to do personal work. More than 150 people rededicated their lives to the Lord night before last.

The revival continues through next week.
