Palestine Needs Another Solomon

No problem facing the world is so difficult as Palestine. In no other case is it so difficult to define, let alone to achieve, complete justice to all.

At least three principal interests tangle in this historic land; 1: that of the great majority of inhabitants, the Arabs; 2: that of the Zionist immigrants, eyes shining with the hope of a Jewish homeland and a Jewish state; and 3: that of the British imperial system, which pledged loyalty to both Jew and Arab, and which conceives it necessary to empire defense to have Palestine in friendly hands.

The Balfour Declaration of 1917, which made the "Jewish homeland" an allied war aim, was a political move. Lloyd George admits that at least the timing of the declaration was "determined by considerations of war policy. It was part of our propagandist strategy for mobilizing every opinion and force throughout the world which would weaken the enemy and improve the allied chances."

In a sense it was also the payment of a debt, a personal debt to Dr. Chaim Weizmann, whose chemical skill had saved the British from a threatening shortage of cordite. The Germans, too, had toyed with the idea of promising a Jewish concession in Palestine, but the British beat them to it.

From the first, and even today, there has been a certain indefiniteness about the Palestine aim. Was "Jewish homeland" to mean merely a symbolical seat where Jewish culture might flourish and develop undisturbed, or an actually sovereign and political Jewish state? The thought seems to have been to begin with the first and gradually merge into the second if population growth and progress justified it.

But since Palestine, and especially Jerusalem, are holy ground and not only to Jews, but to Christians and Mohammedans, it was clearly held in mind at all times that the "Holy Places" must be kept available to all, and the rights of Arab and Christian as well as Jew preserved.

President Wilson spoke of a "Jewish commonwealth" in Palestine, and the mandate might even have been given to America instead of Britain except that it was generally felt the American people would not accept it.

The League of Nations mandate went to the British. They have administered the actual government of the country, while Jews, aided by Zionist movements all over the world, have been building it up economically. The Arabs, meanwhile, watched apprehensively the growth of Jewish population, the building of Jewish cities and industries, foreseeing a day when Jewish predominance might threaten their position.

Aways in the background have been British imperial interests as well, the World War obligations to the Arabs as allies, the position of Palestine near Suez and Egypt, the necessity of not alienating the Mohammedan world.

Into this welter of conflicting interests the latest proposal of the British "White Paper" has been flung, with little augury of success. Truly a 20th-century Solomon might be sorely puzzled to deal even-handed justice to all today in troubled Palestine.

GULF SECTION BEATS HURRICANES TO PUNCH WITH 'TIP-OFF' SYSTEM

Warning Flash Is Advance Agent of Wind

Two red flags with square black centers mean trouble ahead. It's the Weather Bureau's method of telling Texans that a hurricane is headed in from the Gulf of Mexico.

BY VANCE TRIMBLE
NEA Service Special Correspondent

PORT ARTHUR, Texas—Uncle Sam's weathermen are willing to meet a hurricane more than half way. In fact, they insist on it.

So meteorologists of 12 cities, strung in a half-circle around the Gulf of Mexico, will work overtime from June 16 to Oct. 31, to keep in 24-hour operation an elaborate warning system. The annual gulf hurricane season is beginning!

For the fourth successive year, the government will put into use its teletype network connecting the principal bureaus between Key West, Fla., and Brownsville, Texas.

SHIPS SCAN THE SEA
SELECTED ships at sea cooperatively report weather observations four times daily by wireless to the forecast center at New Orleans, La.

This tip off discovery of tropical disturbances while they are still far out at sea, and enables warnings to be flashed over the teletype, hours in advance, to coastal section in the path of the blow. Residents of the danger zone can rush precautions, beating the wind to the punch.

But persons living along the 2000-mile front of the "hurricane belt" don't worry about these storms—until one is actually on the way.

They know from experience that hurricanes chart a tricky course. A storm reported bearing down on a certain point for days might shift its course at the last minute and veer back into the gulf to wear itself out over the water.

A hurricane in the gulf usually is harmless—for large vessels can ride safely through it or travel around. Smaller ships don't venture out from port while a tropical disturbance is at large.

ONE DEATH IN 1938

THE Weather Bureau's vigilance is showing excellent results. In the five states bordering the gulf—Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Florida—there was only one hurricane fatality last year. This was at Lake Charles, La., raked by the only serious blow to move inland in 1938— with the exception of the "wildcat" hurricane which hit the New England states.

Of nearly a dozen other tropical disturbances which entered the gulf last year, none reached the American coast.

Two red flags, with square black centers, flying from the same mast are the Weather Bureau's warning signal.

When those go up at any point on the coast, residents take them seriously. Although the storm may not be due for hours, there's a sudden rush of activity.

A Coast Guard cutter spreads to sea and rides along parallel to the hurricane's course, reporting by radio to a land station. From this information, the Weather Bureau is able to issue hourly advisory bulletins, estimating the time the disturbance will strike the coast, and to report any change in the intensity of the winds.

WIND WHIPS IN CIRCLE
"HURRICANES are something like a large whirling doughnut," explains E. W. Torrence, weather observer at Port Arthur. "The wind roars around in an endless circle, with a diameter of possibly five to 10 miles. It is dead calm in the center."

"While the circular movement of the wind is going 75 miles an hour or better, the whole mass travels slowly—generally 10 to 15 miles an hour."

With a blow on the way, windows of residences and downtown buildings are boarded up. Public schools are opened to house persons fearful their own homes will not withstand the winds. Police, firemen, and civic organizations hold "disaster squads" in readiness.

Residents are advised to fill large containers—usually the bathtub—with drinking water for use after the storm, in event the local water system is polluted.

provision in the law requiring them to notify the department of public safety of changes of names and address so that corrected driver's licenses may be issued. Such notification should be given the department within ten days of the name-changing.

Sad as the news will be to Dan Cupid, the name-changing works both ways. Divorcees also notify the department when the courts restore their maiden names or otherwise make a change in nomenature. Applications for licenses need upset no budget books, since the department has no charge for issuing the certificates.

TRIAL STORY
RIDE ON A BUDGET

BY JANET DORAN
COPYRIGHT, 1939, NEA SERVICE, INC.

"Hello, Bart," Iris answered wilyly. "That was the beginning. When the meal was on the table, Iris wasn't hungry. She was too tired to eat. Too hot. There was too much to do."

"Besides, you want to economize, Bart, and you'll save whatever I might eat."

"No, not company, honey. Just a book. It tells all about budgets and menus and buying and planning meals. So we can begin to save a little."

"It costs almost as much to live at home, Bart, as it does to dine out," Iris argued, "with prices the way they are."

"You don't see any restaurant men going broke do you, Iris? No, and you won't. And this book tells how we can eat like kings on a third of what it's costing us now."

Iris said nothing. But the tiny line between her wide violet eyes was warning that she was thinking intently.

ALL that evening, Iris was the life of the party. She flirted with staid John Kent when she danced with him, and teased Bart constantly. She kept them all in gales of merriment. She had such a grand time herself it was a shock to discover it was time to go on to the play. And then all at once it was 11, and they were home again, and yawning sleepily to bed.

Next day, Bart managed to shut up shop directly after 5. He pulled the curtains as soon as the whistles blew, and didn't answer knocks on the door as he made everything fast for the night. But Iris was home ahead of him. Iris, clad in a faded pink check gingham gown with a ragged tear in one puffed sleeve and a tea towel pinned bewitchingly about her blond curls. Iris, bending over the stove, hurrying to and fro, studying a cookbook. Cooking dinner.

The bedroom was in order, the living room neat, and the table set. And a pot-roast simmered in the oven in an iron kettle, and vegetables steamed in the rich brown juices. On the window-ledge an apple pie cooled, and she was deep in a bran muffin recipe when he came in.

"Hi, wife of my bosom," he greeted her fervently. She flung him a worried, absent glance and wiped her damp forehead on the ragged sleeve.

BRUCE CATTON - - - IN WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON.—The solution of the "labor problem" in America is a thing which begins where the Wagner act leaves off. It is a slow, delicate and involved matter of trial and error, of self-discipline and of practical application of the democratic process. It can not be reached if the federal government tries to use force; compulsion must give way to mediation, conciliation, and a patient effort to help capital and labor work out their own destiny. That, at any rate, is the viewpoint of Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins. In an extended interview, Miss Perkins talked in detail about the part the government should play in the field of labor relations. She does not think that the Wagner act is really a labor act at all; as she sees it, it is simply an act to protect the civil rights of wage-earners and to impose penalties if those rights are violated. She feels that the right to collective bargaining is a thing that must be taken for granted, and that is rapidly attaining universal acceptance; but from that point on, the government must lay aside the big stick and cultivate the diplomatic manner. "Once the right to collective bargaining is established, I don't think the government ought to determine how negotiations are to take place or what the terms in a given agreement are to be," she says. "That's the business of the union and the employer. I think the government's part is to be available for real mediation in cases where the negotiations don't work out satisfactorily. There are a few simple things labor and capital can do, she believes, which would eliminate much industrial strife. For one, she believes a labor contract should provide that no dispute arising during the life of the contract should be grounds for a strike. "I think that's a little hazardous for a nice free democracy like ours, where we do what we please and discipline ourselves to respect our neighbor's rights." Miss Perkins feels that the multiplicity of labor disputes of the last few years simply proves that collective bargaining is like marriage—the first few years are the hardest. Neither capital nor labor yet knows its true relationship to the other; their manners, so to speak, aren't properly adjusted yet. Extensive hearings have been held on the Wagner act, but it is doubtful that modification of that law will come to a final vote before adjournment. Some of the pressure, although by no means all of it, has been taken off. Revision of the Social Security Law probably will be accomplished without much more delay. The House leadership is backing modifications approved by the Social Security Board, and the revisions should be made presently—unless the Townsend-ring general welfare act gets in the way. Now that Secretary Hull has finally formulated the administration's desires on neutrality legislation, action on that thorny issue is brought nearer. Senator Pittman predicts that the Senate Foreign Relations committee will recommend a bill embodying Hull's program. The Senate has got part way with railroad legislation, but hope for a broad, all-inclusive program to rehabilitate the railroads is very dim. Congress talked extensively about working out a new relief program, but so far the only definite development has been the President's action in putting WPA into the new public works agency. Among other matters that await determination are: bill legislation to enable TVA to buy out the properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co.; Senator Mead's bill to make government loans available to small business men; the movement to continue the life of the La Follette Civil Liberties committee; the labor move to amend the Sherman anti-trust law to exempt labor unions, and various bills touching on the control of aliens.

An Ousted Student Offers His Thanks To Ohio University. COLUMBUS, O.—"The finest thing that ever happened to me" is the way one former Ohio State University student looks upon his expulsion. His sincere attitude of appreciation rather than the usual resentment of such former students was expressed in a letter received by Joseph A. Park, dean of men. In his estimation the university has done him a remarkable favor. His unusual view is contained in the following letter postmarked Los Angeles: "I would like to thank you for expelling me from the university. That was the finest thing that ever happened to me. As you know, some people are cut out for school, others are not. I am in the latter class but I never knew it before. My school is the one of hard knocks. The university was too easy on me. I need to be pushed, and believe me, I am being pushed now—and I like it. Therefore, please disregard my application for readmittance to the university. I do not want to go back in, and have no intention of returning to Ohio. My only regret is that I did not leave the university under more favorable conditions." Dean Park explained that the sophomore, whose name he withheld, had been dropped for low scholastic rating. The thank you note was the first of its kind ever received by the dean of men's office.

ECONOMY BEGINS AT HOME. HARTFORD, Conn.—Legislators were conscientious in carrying out Gov. Raymond E. Baldwin's plea of economy. Instead of voting the usual $4,000 for a new gubernatorial sedan, they decided the governor would have to ride in one costing $3,000.

By United Press

'THE BEAR WENT OVER THE MOUNTAIN...'

You remember why, don't you? Certainly. It was "to see what he could see."

And it's for just this same beautifully simple reason that thousands of knowing people run through the advertisements in their daily newspaper.

For, it seems, civilized men and women are seldom satisfied with their lot. In this ever-producing age they have an insatiable appetite for something new which may make life brighter. That something may be an electric razor, or new summer clothes... a good book, or a ride in a streamlined train.

So they turn the newspaper pages to see what they can see. There they're able to find what it is, why it is, where it is, and how much it is. And the advertisements say, "Come and get it!"
