Stalwarts Still Keep "Broadway Spirit" Alive

It is well for the Broadway of America that there are still a few stalwart persons to run caravans over the highway and raise some hoop-la so folks won't go into too deep a slumber. In its formative days, the highway was blessed with the greatest aggregation of boosters that ever lived along a main traffic artery. But today the majority of the communities are merely resting on their oars and there is plenty of indication the highway is drifting. To Texas, the highway is still the most important, almost bi-secting the state and the shortest road from Texarkana to El Paso.

This year's Broadway caravan passed through this city to reassure us that we are still on the highway. It is natural for us to take it as a matter of course but let's not forget that it imposes upon us certain obligations. One of these is to see that this highway all along its length is kept out in front. We have plenty of competition from other communities that are pushing east and west roads. They are showing a tremendous amount of enthusiasm and if it holds out, one day we will wake up to find that our traffic has gone off and left us.

A Place for the Kids to Play

Probably there is not one city in the country which has enough playgrounds and play space for children.

Perhaps there is enough such space in Radburn, the specially designed "motor-age" city in New Jersey, or in Greenbelt, Md., where a town has been designed with just such ends in view. But generally speaking, no large city has enough play space for children, and not many smaller cities.

Admitting the fact, the usual American reaction is to shrug a shoulder, remark, "Why doesn't the city provide more parks?" Broke, I suppose," and let it go at that.

Not much of the old rugged individualism spirit there! Something can be done about it, done without the aid of the city park department, done without a WPA project, done without anything but the determination of a group of parents that they will themselves make a safe place for their children to play.

Any three or four adjoining households where there are children can throw their back yards together, tear down the fences, and create a common playground. The families can chip in for swings and see-saws, and the mothers can take turns watching over the plot for couple of hours a day each. Other families nearby, but whose back yards do not adjoin the plot chosen, can bear a proportionately larger share of the equipment cost and the supervision, to offset the sacrifice of gardens and lawns by those whose yards are used.

Wise landlords usually don't object. One said, "What if they do use up the grass in the back yards? It just means that they'll stay off the grass in the front."

The kids will grow up. Time enough then to set the yards back into grass and gardens. Infinite variations on this plan can be tried according to local situations.

Parents who are really intent on keeping the kids off the streets will not feel that the cost in energy, initiative, and trouble was too high.

BRUCE CATTON -- IN WASHINGTON

BY BRUCE CATTON
RMA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON—A strong, well financed, and ably organized lobby is back of the present drive to "save the farmer" by amending the wage-hour law.

The ostensible aim of the drive is to complete the exemption of farm laborers from the drive. Actually, the program would remove approximately 1,000,000 food processors from coverage of the wage-hour law. It is especially designed to exempt workers in fruit and vegetable canneries and packers—of which the Wage and Hour Administration estimates that there are some 400,000.

Along with it goes a drive to take these same workers out from under the social security law—and, if possible, out of Wagner act coverage also. One social security law amendment, recommended by the House Ways and Means committee, would exempt the agricultural processors, and is likely to go through along with the "liberalizing" security act amendments okayed by the Social Security Board.

The battle is being fought in the House of Representatives. Congresswoman Mary Norton of New Jersey has a bill to amend the wage-hour law so as to exempt small town telephone employees, and workers earning more than $200 a month. A House "farm bloc" has formed to demand exclusion of the processing workers as well. The result of the struggle may be that no wage-hour amendments at all are passed.

Both the Farm Bureau Federation and the National Grange have joined in the move to exempt processing workers. The central organization in the drive, however, is a group known as the Agricultural Producers Labor Committee, of Los Angeles, whose lawyer, Ivan G. McDaniel, is heading up the whole campaign. And the Agricultural Producers Labor Committee has an interesting background.

Letterheads of the committee list W. E. Spencer as its chairman, and include the names of Roy K. Cole, George B. Hodgin and W. C. Tesche as members. Now, it happens that the articles of incorporation of the Associated Farmers of Los Angeles county, filed with the California secretary of state, list those men as directors of the Associated Farmers.

Spencer was one of its incorporators, and acted as temporary chairman at its organizational meeting. In addition, two other members of the Agricultural Producers Labor Committee have been financial contributors to the Associated Farmers.

In October, 1937, Spencer addressed a meeting of the California State Chamber of Commerce. That summer, he said, C. I. O. and A. F. of L. organizers had tried to organize workers in California citrus and vegetable packing houses, and had brought complaints before the Labor Board. It was to meet this issue, he declared, that the committee was brought into being.

"The Agricultural Producers Labor Committee has only one objective," he asserted. "It is the securing of a definition of 'agricultural labor' to exempt all handlers of fresh fruit and vegetables in their raw and natural state from the provisions of the national labor relations act."

That effort failed. The Labor Board has since taken jurisdiction in at least three cases covering such employees. But it is precisely over a definition of "agricultural labor" that the present wage-hour law fight is raging.

No Aged Probing Until Ruling Is Secured—W. A. Little

W. A. Little, director of the Texas Old Age Assistance Commission, stated today that no investigations would be made of applicants for Old Age Assistance under the new law until a ruling had been secured from the attorney general's department, which opinion would serve in formulating policies and procedure of investigation under the liberalized act. Even after the opinion has been secured, it will be necessary for investigational instructions to be perfected and workers advised as to their use. This will likely require another week or ten days after the attorney general's department has officially acted.

Miss Grigolet Entertains With Barn Dance

Thursday evening Miss Jean Grigolet entertained the younger social set with a barn dance in the American Legion hall.

The hall was transformed into a typical country barn. Bales of hay, wagon wheels, plows, harness and barnyard fowls and animals were used to create the atmosphere of the farm. Coal-oil lanterns furnished the light.

Guests wore costumes in keeping with the occasion and at midnight each guest brought forth a "farm hand" lunch box and supper was spread.

Chaperones for the affair were: Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Hinkson and Mrs. C. C. Mitchell of Strawn; Mes. Charles Conley, Ross Hodges, Hattie Brazz and Mr. and Mrs. Grigolet.

Guests included: Dorothy Henry, Helen Gholson, Francis Gholson, Jimmy Utley, Vera Ann Vaughn, Maude Fayé Turner, Daisy Woods, Francis Johnson, Maurice Croom, Louise Packwood, Alice Louise Henry, Catherine Conley, Catherine Murray, Sue Turner, Bessie Robinson, Dorothy Campbell, Margaret Watt, Dixie Tucker, Roberta Mitchell, Dixie Gilger, Doris May, Lois Bragg, Lois Higdon, Minnie Lee Shirley.

Mineral Wells Is Getting Ready For Health Festival
MINERAL WELLS—The Texas city known as the South's Greatest Health Resort will deck out in gala carnival style for the Texas Health Festival to be staged four days beginning July 13.

This gigantic celebration, which commemorates the discovery of the mineral waters for which this resort is noted is sponsored and underwritten by the Junior Chamber of Commerce in Mineral Wells. The organization, within itself, is composed of the leading business men of the city and the celebration represents an investment of several thousand dollars.

Highlighting the celebration will be the mammoth Miss Texas Revue Pageant. This pageant, presented in open air on the 14 and 15 of July, will tell a beautiful story with a Grecian setting. Stressing health over all other points, the "Miss Texas" selected at Mineral Wells will be the official Texas representative in the noted Atlantic City "Miss America" contest and at both world fairs.

Old time fiddlers contests and a state-wide square dance contest will add the pioneering touch, while the Texas appearance of a nationally known orchestra will add the modern touch.

Probably the largest power boat regatta to be held in Texas this year will climax the celebration at Lake Mineral Wells. Gar Wood, Jr., and many other noted drivers will participate.

A series of smaller events and free attractions which include sports, music, drama and farm, ranch and home educational demonstrations will result in continuous entertainment during the four days of this gala celebration.

The Texas Health Festival, conceived several years ago to attract people to West Texas and let them become acquainted with Mineral Wells, is one of the most novel celebrations staged in the United States. Over 25,000 people from all over the Southwest have indicated they would attend the Mineral Wells celebration.

Hassen Co. Will Have Closeout Sale
Hassen Co., Inc., of Ranger, for a number of years one of the town's leading dry goods stores, has announced a big close out sale, which will start this week.

John Hassen, owner of the firm, who formerly resided in Ranger, but who now lives in Sulphur, Okla., has interests there that require his time and do not permit him to continue management of the local store, it was stated Saturday.

Attempted suicides are three times as frequent among women, three times as successful among men. Most of the feminine varieties are probably just threats for a new wardrobe.
