Pin Down the Loose Talker, and Think!

If ever there was a time when the people of the United States need to think clearly, to see the substance of things and not the shadows, it is now.

The testimony of the Deathrages and Moseleys before the Dies Committee is evidence that we are scooting into another of those periodic moments in our history when people whisper and pass dark rumors in corners rather than standing up in the light and carefully seeking to find the truth.

Nothing is more dangerous than this. And the only remedy is to pin down every such rumor-monger with questions like "Exactly why do you believe that?" and "What is the source of that information?"

You hear them buzzing everywhere: "They are going to take over the government!" "They are doing this, and plotting that!"

They! They! Exactly who are "they," those mysterious and elusive people of whom 130,000,000 Americans are expected to be so afraid? Is it the 80,000-odd members of the Communist party? Is it the unsteady number of adherents to fly-by-night letterhead Fascist organizations, probably far smaller in number?

Who are "they" anyway? Insist on knowing, from the next person who buttonholes you with some of this gin-mill and cocktail party stuff, exactly who he or she means. Insist on knowing precisely of what this fell plot consists. Insist on knowing how he or she knows about it in the first place.

General Moseley doesn't trust the newspapers, he said, to give a true picture of what is going on. Naturally he is entitled to any such opinion he may feel justified in holding.

But what appears in the newspapers is open and aboveboard. It can be read at leisure and unemotionally. The source of much of what newspapers print is clearly indicated. Behind every word of it is an elaborate and skilled organization of trained people who have checked and rechecked.

Many critical eyes have read the contents of every newspaper before it goes to the public. The number of newspapers which would willingly mislead people is small indeed, and even they look good compared to the mass of furtive and improbable rumors that circulate by word of mouth and in many organs devoted to special causes.

"Is there any sense to this?" "Does it sound reasonable and sane?" "Who says so?" "What motive might he have for saying so?" "Where did he get that?" "What actual grounds is there for believing this?"

Those are the questions we ought all to ask ourselves whenever one of these "insidestuff artists" begins to work on us. It is not time to be gullible. It is a time to weigh, to consider, and to think.

Cook warns that arbor vitae and other cedars can be heavily infested with the little bags which hold the bagworms without the owner being aware unless a close watch is kept on the shrubs. The worms eat the leaves and also use them to cover the silken bag which later holds the cocoon or resting stage and the eggs of the insect.

Bagworms can be controlled by spraying until the tree or shrub is dripping wet with a mixture of three pounds of arsenate of lead in 50 gallons of water. The poison should be kept on the plants until the worms are all dead.

Further Plans To Hold Goat Show In County Formulated

Goat raisers and others interested will hold a meeting in Eastland County some time in August, according to plans that are being made by Elmo V. Cook, county agent.

The tentative plans for the meeting are that it will be held at a location where goats are being run. W. R. Nisbet, extension animal husbandman, will classify goats that are brought to the meeting by goat raisers and will discuss proper management of goats for success.

Interest in goat problems is increasing in Eastland County in proportion to the rapid increase in the number of goats in the county. The number of goats in the county has increased several hundred per cent in the last three years, according to recent estimates.

Details of the goat meeting are being worked out by Elmo V. Cook, county agent, and Dr. R. H. Hodges, who is chairman of the Eastland County Agricultural Council, an advisory board created to cooperate with the county agent in planning his work.

Region Auxiliary Holds Special Meeting
The American Legion Auxiliary the Carl Barnes Post No. 65, Tuesday evening at the home of the President, Mrs. J. B. McFister, Gholson, held for the special meeting of the auxiliary. Mrs. McFister presided at the meeting. The business session before turning the meeting over to Mrs. R. Taylor, who was in charge of the program on "Fidac." Fidac is the only world organization of the allied veterans in existence. The name "Fidac" is the set form for the long title of the organization, which is Federation of Allied of Former Combatants. It is together in American style and it appears as "The Legion of the Allied Veterans of the World War."

The nations holding membership in Fidac are the United States, Great Britain, France, Belgium, Italy, Yugoslavia, Poland, Rumania, Portugal, Czechoslovakia, and Greece. It was organized on July 4, 1920 in Paris when the allied veterans met.
The purposes of this organization are:
To draw ever closer the links which bound the allied and associated ex-service men during the war of 1914-1918 fought in common for a common cause.
To keep reverently the memory of the dead.
To work for peace.
To defend the rights of ex-service men and their dependents as well as those of victims of the war of 1914-1918.
To make known the program, the life and work of its member associations.
To recall the sacrifices and efforts of the Fidac countries during the war of 1914-1918.
To combat national or international false news and anti-allied campaigns.
To inform ex-service men how to become better acquainted with one another, so that they may better understand one another.

To instruct the younger generation in this spirit.
The permanent headquarters are in Paris, France.
The American Legion and Auxiliary are members to Fidac from the United States.
Each year the American Legion Auxiliary throughout the United States studies the customs and habits of some of the allied countries, and this year Rumania was chosen for study.
Mrs. Taylor introduced Mrs. A. Tunn, who gave a very interesting review of the customs and habits of Rumania.
Mrs. Taylor then gave a descriptive narrative about the life of Queen Marie of Rumania, who served her country so nobly during the "World War."
After this interesting program was completed, Mrs. Taylor assisted by co-hosts, Mrs. McFister, served orange iced to eleven members and one guest.
After the refreshments were served Mrs. McFister was called to the back bed room where she found to her surprise the bed covered with a massing of beautiful gifts for her new home.

Correct Constipation Before—Not After!
An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of emergency relief. Why let yourself suffer those dull listless days because of constipation, why bring on the need for emergency medicines, when there may be a far better way? That way is to KEEP regular by getting at the cause of the trouble.
If it's common constipation, due to lack of "bulk" in the diet, a pleasant, nutritious, ready-to-eat cereal—Kelllogg's All-Bran—goes straight to the cause by supplying the "bulk" you need.
Eat this crunchy toasted cereal every day—with milk or cream, or baked into muffins—drink plenty of water, and see if you don't forget all about constipation. Made by Kelllogg's in Battle Creek. Sold by every grocer.

Eva Huskey, State Supervising Deputy, addressed the gathering. A group of 60 members from Ranger attended.
The next meeting of the chapter will be held Wednesday evening June 28 at 7:30 o'clock.

SERIAL STORY

BRIDE ON A BUDGET

BY JANET DORAN

Yesterday, Bart and Iris quarreled, but Iris has her dinner just in time. She tells Bart she has money, he discovers she is in debt. Yet Iris says she will make a deal with him.

CHAPTER XI

THOUGH it was Monday, and she had recklessly splurged $12 on a dinner party for her friends Saturday night and Bart had worked at the shop all day Sunday, and Sunday night until long after she slept, Iris left the office with a clear plan in her busy mind. She had taken the milk coat at noon, and hidden it deep in one end of her clothes chest back of her last winter's coat, her raincoat, her summer sport coat, and the long, furled tweed coat to her wardrobe suit.

Now, at four-thirty, she bought a steak, bought everything for a grand fee. The way she used to do before they were married. When she was trying every wife she knew to enchant Bart and make him propose to her.

At six-fifteen, Bart came in, tired, slumped and silent. She flung him a radiant smile and started the steak. She took the potatoes out and popped cubes of butter into each yawning seam, where the scored place had burst a few minutes before. The lima beans oozed yellow butter as she poured them into the dish, and the hot rolls were just right—crisp, and not dry.

Still he didn't notice. Still he just came in, pulled his chair out and sat down and began scooping his potato out onto his plate. Iris pushed him the platter of steak, and he helped himself to it. By the time they reached the short-cake, Iris was ready to scream. She watched him cut the cake, watched his fork travel from the plate, laden with cream topped peaches and cake, to his mouth, and back again, and the awful silence was too much. Abruptly, she pushed away her untouched desert. Desperately, she faced him across the little table laden with the remnants of their lovely dinner.

"Bart, what is it?" she asked shakily.

DULLY, he looked at her. Wearily, as if trying to brush away a burden he could not bear, he plucked tense fingers through the thick wavy brown hair. Then lighting a cigaret, he started spitting the match a dozen ways with nervous thumb nail.

"What's it to you, Iris?" he asked bluntly.

"Bart, you know anything that concerns you, concerns me, too?"

"Don't worry, I'll manage to support you in the manner you're determined to enjoy, Iris."

"Bart—please!"

"All right, you asked for it. The bank wouldn't give me any more time on my notes, so they took over my insurance as forfeit."

"Bart—why how could they? If you paid the interest and met the payments."

"I didn't pay the interest, Iris. I couldn't. And I couldn't borrow any money anywhere. Not even from loan sharks. So they took my policies."

"They'd no right to take all that insurance away from you, Bart! Can't you make them just take out the amount due, and give you back the rest?"

"Iris, you know nothing about business or finance, so quit bothering with this."

"Quit bothering, Bart Whittaker! The idea. When that was to be our own home, when the policies were paid up."

He glanced at her curiously. Shrugged finally, as if he gave up. "It's a little late to think of that now, Iris. They're gone."

That night, Iris woke up toward morning, and a cold fall rain was blowing in. She got up and closed the window, and turned, arrested, when Bart began muttering in his sleep.

"I tell you it's impossible—I'm sorry, I can't help it. I can't do it. I tell you, I can't do it. You understand? My wife's salary has nothing to do with this, this is my affair. Seventy-five a week together and we owe everybody. All right, so what? Do you want all my creditors to be cheated of their money?"

Shivering, she lay still listening, but there was no more. Though he tossed and turned a lot and groaned. Shivering, she wondered if she oughtn't take the milk coat back after all. Before it was ever worn. But it was so cold in the morning, a sharp wind, and the driving rain. And remembering her heavy coat was worn, she put the anxiety out of her mind. Bart was always borrowing trouble. This was probably just another false alarm because he hadn't made $50 clear profit this week, or something like that.

They breakfasted hastily, and Bart hurried away as soon as he was finished. At noon, when she telephoned, Iris was informed he was out. And Ellen was lunching with her husband, and neither offered to invite her to join them. So she ate a solitary lunch at the soda bar around the corner. And finishing, heard the news about her husband losing his radio and washing machine agency.

"Sure, didn't you know? Truck's over there now, taking the stuff. I heard he couldn't make a lot of dead-beats pay their weekly installments, so the company took them over. But this will be a bad dent to the shop all right. Hurts a business when anything like that hits them."

IRIS didn't answer. She walked out and went back to the office. Past Professor Kitteridge's little bungalow where the young men and girls of the senior and junior classes gathered to discuss serious things, nightly from 4:30 to 10. Past the Gamma sorority where girls often dashed out in mid-winter to set a pan of chocolate peanut butter fudge to cool in the snow; where gay lighted music blared forth during prom weekends. Where smart roadsters scooped up to toilet musical horns for the fortunate few who were dated.

Iris felt almost old, hurrying past them. Nodding to one or two she knew. Knowing they thought of her as "Mrs. Whittaker, of the dean's office." Because she'd been there so long. Longer than any of the present crop had been in college. Two college terms longer. Eight years.

That night, Bart was home ahead of her. Lying on his bed, covered with a satin puff. Ill with a severe cold. Tired, and ill, and silent. Iris tried to make him some medicine, some aspirin, or a gargle, or something but he refused. He was all right; leave him alone. She tried to make him have a doctor.

"I don't want a doctor, and I couldn't pay one if I had him. Now get out and leave me alone, will you?"

In the kitchen, feeling rather abused and neglected, she scrambled two eggs and made coffee. There was some short-cake left, and some salad. Eating her solitary supper, Iris decided budgets weren't much fun. Not mixed with marriage they weren't. Because the budgets were to blame for all this.

In the middle of the night, she heard Bart prowling around. And speaking to him sharply, was alarmed to discover he was walking in his sleep. His voice sounded queer and thick, and a trifle shrill, but he got back into bed again directly when she spoke to him. And right after that he had a chill. Shaking so her own bed three feet away trembled, Iris was alarmed and got up.

She got her heavy winter coat, and her spring coat, and his overcoat and piled them on his bed. She lighted the gas and boiled water and got a hot water bottle. Still he shook so his teeth trembled and he kept sneezing in awful spasms of seven or eight sneezes at a time.

At 7, when Iris awoke again, he was delicious and did not know her. Frantically, she called a doctor.

Fire Loss Still A Major Problem In Rural Areas

AUSTIN, Tex.—Despite improvements in farming methods, equipment and facilities, the farmer of today is still faced with a serious problem which, unless solved, will continue to retard the general progress of the business and reduce every farmer's profit. This problem is the annual fire loss suffered on farm property, according to Marvin Hall, State Fire Insurance Commissioner.

"Nearly two million dollars property loss is suffered each year on the farms of Texas," Commissioner Hall pointed out, "and a very substantial reduction can be made in this figure if farmers generally will observe a few simple rules of fire protection and prevention."

The losses in barns and granaries contribute largely to this annual toll, as these are peculiarly subject to fire danger. Of the many sources of barn fires, spontaneous combustion is perhaps the most dangerous and the one which should first be eliminated. Moisture, bacterial activity, germination and storage in large heaps may be listed as the main causes of spontaneous combustion.

When feeds are curing or drying, bacterial activity is always present, and everybody knows that wet or green feed in storage will heat. Unless the heat is carried away by ventilation, it may become so intense as to set fire to the feed, and this sad result is hastened by large heaps of quantities stored in one place.

Some of the important facts and fire preventative measures which should be observed, Hall said, may be briefly explained as follows:

Because hay is subject to spontaneous combustion it should be thoroughly dried before being put into the barn. The use of common table salt is recommended when storing loose hay, which is thoroughly cured since a sprinkling of salt reduces the danger, and thereby lowers the danger. From three to ten pounds salt to each ton of hay will be sufficient for hay stored in weather.

In curing to allow air circulation underneath is strongly advised. Start with a few planks or logs on the floor, then grow some space between bales for ventilation, stacking it so there is air around each bale. If heating is up, the air will carry the heat away, cooling the hay and thus preventing a fire and saving the quality of the hay.

Ear corn is another source of "unknown" fires. When stored, run a pipe down the center, that the hot bases may escape. "All feedstuffs should be stored and dried before being stored," Hall said. "Even the feed should be examined occasionally during the periods it is stored to see that it is not heating and ready for spontaneous combustion to take place, these and other simple rules followed by the farmer, he can thereby benefit himself and his neighbor."
