A Conqueror Assumes a Conqueror's Woes

Conquest is, on its face, a dramatic and impressive spectacle. It naturally tends to inspire a warm glow in the people at home who have sent their sons to bring it about, even in those whose sons did not come back.

But conquest is a coin with two sides. The bright face, the one polished by the clash of arms, is readily visible. But the other face is often dark and scaly. It is the business of consolidating the "grains" of making the conquest actually worth the cost.

Italy knows about that. Nobody can draw an accurate balance-sheet on the Ethiopian adventure, but it is a fairly easy guess that outgo far exceeds income up to this time. There is the good Italian blood spilled in the desert sands, there is the cost of the expeditionary force, and the continuing cost of supporting a big army. There are the development costs which must precede any great return in raw materials.

Germany is beginning to find out about the other side of the coin, too. In Kladno, near Prague, a German policeman is shot. Just what were the circumstances is not yet clear, but it would appear that he got into one of those jams which are inevitable when a foreign armed force is placed over native civilian populations.

Older Germans will remember the Zabern affair, when a young and arrogant Prussian officer cut down an Alsatian townsman with his sword. The Alsations, after many years of German occupation, still hated the garrisons, and iron rule was necessary.

So, too, we find now at Klano: meetings prohibited, theatres closed, schools closed, doors and windows of houses must be closed at night on pain of being fired into, civil officials are removed and local police disarmed.

These things have all happened before. They happened in Belgium when the German troops occupied Dinant, and Ypres, and a score of Belgian cities. The Belgian population was ruthlessly represented by the military. But they remained Belgian.

It makes no particular difference who is immediately at fault in the Kladno affair. Such things happen, they must happen, and will happen, as long as foreign military remains in charge of a freedom-loving people.

To cope with such situations, to polish the dirty side of the coin of conquest—that is a task for which Germany asked when it seized Czechoslovakia. Leaving the moral side out of it for the moment, was it worth it?

The Japanese ambassador says the doors of China are still open to the U. S. Yes, but do the doormen understand that?

A Detroit woman picked 302 four-leaf clovers in the back yard of her home. There isn't that much good luck in the world lady.

And Princess Elizabeth and Margaret Rose, reunited with parents, ride with them.

BRUCE CATTON IN WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON—A slow, but significant drift in New Deal thinking in regard to business loans is in progress these days. It is headed up by the various lending proposals which are now under public discussion, and it points in the direction of vastly increased exercise by Washington of functions which even the New Deal has heretofore considered the private banker's job. Most obvious, of course, is Senator Mead's loan-for-small-businessmen bill. This wouldn't put the government directly into the banking business—or, at least, not all the way in. Basically, it is simply a plan to guarantee private-bank loans up to 90 per cent. Next comes A. A. Berle's proposal for a government agency to lend money to business men or firms which had new construction programs in mind. This might either take the form of direct loans or of the purchase of bonds. It is commonly referred to under the name of the capital credit system. The Berle plan is a step beyond the Mead plan. It may also be significant to notice that a step beyond the Mead plan is the proposal for a capital issues banking system which is being advocated by the American Association for Economic Freedom, and which will be introduced in Congress before the present session ends. This last scheme would simply have the government take over the functions of the ordinary investment banker. The underwriting and distribution of all capital issues would be handled by a government organization set up somewhat along the lines of the Federal Reserve System. It would put the private investment banker out of business—a aim which is also in the back of the minds of those who are talking up the Berle plan. All of this is not to say that it is Roosevelt administration is committed to any such step at this time. H. RALPH BURTON currently is an investigator for the House committee which is probing into the foibles of WPA, large and small. As such, he has presented to the committee a considerable mass of evidence which has been highly enlightening to WPA. Which somehow makes it interesting to report that approximately four months ago Burton was then employed by the congressional committee—sent to WPA headquarters here and asked for a job on WPA's own investigating staff. He got turned down, soon after was hired by the committee. The U. S. Housing Authority probably is responsible for the death of more rats than any other outfit in the country. When new dwellings are built under USHA programs, the law provides that an equivalent number of slum dwellings must be demolished. These, the USHA people have found, are invariably rat-infested. If left to themselves, the rats could simply move into the new buildings along with the tenants. Harry Hopkins' Business Advisory Council has put in weekly trying to work out a set of Wagner Act amendments that could get White House approval. The job is nearing completion. It is said to include provisions for increasing the Labor Board membership to five, permitting employers to petition for elections, and modifying the rule which prohibits an employer from discussing labor problems with employees. Hopkins is reported to favor this personally. However, he'll confer with Labor Secretary Perkins and Labor Board Chairman Madden before handing the President a final, definite set of recommendations.

Cause Of Squalus Disaster To Remain Mystery At Present

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., June 24—The cause of the sinking of the submarine Squalus, with a loss of 26 lives, will remain a mystery until it is raised from the bottom of the Atlantic Ocean, it appeared today. A naval court of inquiry adjourned, apparently satisfied that the submarine was flooded through the main engine induction valve, but still puzzled as to what caused the valve to open and as to whether it opened before or after the start of the fatal dive on May 23. The court will reconvene after the submarine has been raised and brought into drydock at the navy yard here, but that was expected to be at least another month and probably longer. Arctic Expedition To Study Icebergs. BOOTH BAY HARBOR, Me., June 24.—Commander Donald McMillan today began his 18th Arctic expedition to study icebergs and glaciers. SERIAL STORY

PAR IS LOVE

BY EDWIN RUTT
COPYRIGHT 1939,
NEA SERVICE, INC.

Yesterday Roylton learns the girl's name is Barbara Ganning. He decides to stay, posing as the banker's cousin. The chauffeur's name is Baskerville. Roylton notes Barbara over the wall, in to meet her at 5 p. m.

CHAPTER III

INASMUCH as the hedge that surrounded the swimming pool was fairly high, Roy did not perceive an elderly gentleman who sat in the shelter of it on the side of the garage. Looking down from his window on the first morning after his installation as a relative of Baskerville's, he saw only a tiled tank full of blimp green water. He hesitated. He did not know whether it was permissible for a cousin of the Ganning's chauffeur to dip himself in these waters. On the other hand, the probabilities were that no one would know about it. The hour was early and the pool a considerable distance from the house. Roylton, Augustus, decided to take a chance.

While donning bathing suit he reviewed events. True to her word, Miss Babs Ganning had appeared at five o'clock the previous afternoon bringing the intelligence that a cousin of the Ganning's chauffeur to dip himself in these waters. On the other hand, the probabilities were that no one would know about it. The hour was early and the pool a considerable distance from the house. Roylton, Augustus, decided to take a chance.

After this things had slowed down, Miss Babs Ganning with the twins, Ronald and Wilfrid, had gone to a dance in the evening. Mr. Roy Herring had threatened a small game of two-handed poker. And, in the privacy of the garage, Mr. Herring had taken Mr. Baskerville over to the tune of 75 cents.

MEANWHILE, J. Pemberton Ganning sat in the shadow of the hedge that enclosed the swimming pool. He was not in one of his light humors and his scamed face, bent over a book, wore an annoyed frown. An indifferent sleeper, J. Pemberton could remember no night when he had been deeper in the black books of Morpheus than the one just passed. And the worst of it was that he had gone to sleep upon hitting the pillow, a delightful and rare phenomenon. For perhaps an hour he had lain wrapped in slumber. Then, things had happened.

A sort of twanging, twinking noise had crept under the curtain of sleep. Relentlessly it had caused his eyes to open, his ears to quiver and his body to assume a sitting position. Then he had listened. The sound had been one that J. Pemberton, a student of night noises though he was, had difficulty in placing. But, after some minutes, he had made a diagnosis. It derived its origin, in his opinion, from a banjo played with jerky tunelessness beneath his window.

With this banjo, J. Pemberton Ganning had dealt summarily. Leaping from his bed he had rushed to the window and caused the night to echo with his views on banjos and all who played them. He had been rewarded with a shuffle of uneasy feet and silence. But Morpheus, insulted, had refused to return. And J. Pemberton Ganning, after a night of sheep totalling, had crept forth to enjoy the early morning sun, determined to hold an inquisition as soon as the younger members of his household were abroad. He sat now in a steamer chair enveloped in an old gray blanket. The book he read was entitled "Invertebrates of the Tertiary Period."

J. Pemberton appeared above the hedge, the ends of his mustache bristling, the blanket clinging to his shoulders.

From behind the hedge came a splash. J. Pemberton was but dimly aware of it. He supposed vaguely that his daughter or one of those idiotic twins was disporting in the pool. The next instant a stream of water cascaded suddenly over the hedge, deluging himself, the gray blanket and "Invertebrates of the Tertiary Period."

J. PEMBERTON bounced up angrily. He appeared above the hedge, the ends of his mustache bristling and his graying locks matted by the flying water. With the blanket clinging to his shoulders he was not unlike an elderly bull walrus with a chill.

"Stop that!" He had spoken before looking. He now perceived that the cause of the commotion was a young man in a blue bathing suit whose hands failed the sunlit surface of the pool in a superabundance of good spirits.

"Hi!" he exclaimed again. "What the devil are you doing?" The young man looked up. He was not sure about the apparition on the other side of the hedge. It might be a walrus. But walruses, he knew, were uncommon in the vicinity. Accordingly, he ceased flailing in order to study the problem.

J. Pemberton Ganning delivered himself. "If you're going to swim," he said irritably, "swim. But don't sit there throwing water around." He stopped, struck by a thought. "Hey, who are you, anyhow?" The young man came out of the waters. J. Pemberton noted that he had gray eyes and a magnificent torso.

"I!" said this young man. "Oh, I—I'm—er—I'm Baskerville's cousin." "I want to know," said J. Pemberton, "how you come to be here."

"WELL, it's like this," the young man put on a blue-and-white striped dressing gown. "I happened to be passing so I thought I'd drop in on Baskerville, he being my cousin. And he suggested that I stay a night or two with him. So I did. I sleep over the garage." "You do, eh? Who gave you permission?" "Why, I think Baskerville got it from a young lady. A very pretty young lady with violet eyes."

"Hump! That would be my daughter?" "She is," said J. Pemberton, in a what-about-it tone. "Well, you're very lucky," said the young man.

"How's that?" "You're lucky to have such a delightful daughter." "If you," said J. Pemberton, pursuing a favorite theme, "had a daughter, who filled the house with imbeciles who look exactly alike, who play golf all over the lawn in the daytime and banjos all night, you wouldn't talk about luck."

A suspicion struck J. Pemberton. "You don't play a banjo, do you?" he asked dangerously. "Me? Well—er—that is, no," Mr. Ganning looked relieved. "What do you do, then?" "I—er—well..." Roy stopped, confused, then saw light. "I'm an evolutionist."

"What!" He was unprepared for the roar which escaped J. Pemberton Ganning. "An evolutionist," he continued doubtfully. "You know, Darwin and—those fellow—I am a subscriber to the theory that man came upon this earth through a long series of—of, shall we say, incarnations, beginning with what is called an amoeba and ending, perhaps, with the anthropoid ape. Just how life itself got started I am unprepared to say..." He ceased, partly because he was out of ideas and partly because of J. Pemberton Ganning's face. Behind its mustaches that face was positively beaming.

"My dear sir," said J. Pemberton enthusiastically. "My dear sir, do you realize that you have just made the only intelligent remarks that have been made on these premises since—since the summer of 1927?" He paused, then came through with an amendment. "Except, of course, those which I have made myself."

Health Festival At Mineral Wells To Have Big Program

MINERAL WELLS, Tex. — Screaming fiddles and plucking guitars intermingled with the thump, thump, thump of the musicians' feet will highlight the first evening of the Texas Health Festival, July 13, 14, 15, 16 in Mineral Wells.

For one evening this world famed health resort will be the scene of one of the largest old time square dances ever staged in Texas.

Square dance sets from El Paso, Houston, Fort Worth and many other sections of the state are practicing up their "ladies how low and gents bow under" to the tune of Sally Goodin and Buffalo Gals to meet the competition afforded them at the Mineral Wells event.

Save the date for the first evening of the Texas Health Festival, July 13, 14, 15, 16 in Mineral Wells.

The old fashioned square dances are becoming popular throughout the United States. The Texas Health Festival contest, which has been successfully conducted for several years, is going to be the biggest event of its kind this year.

The entire city of Mineral Wells is becoming square dance conscious as they make elaborate plans to entertain the participants in this contest.
