ALLIES PRESS WAR PLANS ON WESTERN FRONT

The allies pressed ahead today with preparations for a big scale warfare on the western front in anticipation of final failure of Adolf Hitler's peace offensive. A total of 158,000 British troops, a vast amount of equipment including 15-ton tanks, are now in France under a unified command headed by French Gen. Maurice Gamelin, the British government disclosed today.

Although Nazis insisted that they had no quarrel with the allied demand for security, the nazis' conquest in Europe appeared to be facing sterner opposition from both the allies and Finland. From Moscow came a hint of trouble in the near east with announcement that forces on the Persian frontier had been re-enforced.

The two main tests in the diplomatic-military field emerged as: 1—A declaration in the house of commons tomorrow by Chamberlain, who was understood to be prepared to join France in rejecting Adolf Hitler's peace terms, but leaving the way open for a more acceptable offer.

2—A firm stand by little Finland to avoid being drawn into the "iron belt of Baltic states" being drawn up by Russia. The Finnish fleet was being brought up, soldiers mobilized and civilians evacuated from possible danger points and guns mounted in Helsinki.

It remained to be seen whether Berlin would oppose Russia's armed forces in a suicidal fight, if a showdown comes. Although the Finns hoped for outside help there was little hope they would get more than sympathy.

There was some difficulty in completing arrangements for removing 120,000 racial Germans from the Baltic countries to Germany. Hitler also was understood to be arranging for repatriation of about 2,000,000 Germans from Hungary, Roumania and Yugoslavia.

In Berlin official circles apparently lost hope that Hitler's terms would prove a basis for peace negotiations, although the German public believed widely some agreement would be reached.

And Now It Is Lloyd George Who Wages Peace!

Nobody is likely to argue that Prime Minister Chamberlain of the United Kingdom, on his record, is one who is likely to turn heedlessly aside from any honest offer of peace that really promises a civilized Europe. It was Chamberlain who sacrificed so much (that did not belong to England) to the cause of "peace in our time."

So it seems strange indeed to see a figure rising in the House of Commons and demanding that Chamberlain give fullest consideration to any offer of peace coming from neutrals. And stranger still that this figure should be that of the stocky little Welshman, David Lloyd George.

It is 20 years ago, true, but the world can scarcely have forgotten that this is the same Lloyd George who was so great a factor in forcing through the Versailles mill the treaty whose failure put the world where it is today.

Was it not this same Lloyd George who went before his electorate just before the peace conference opened, with a program of "hang the Kaiser and make Germany pay the full cost of the war"?

Was it not this same Lloyd George who won his election on that platform and then returned to Versailles in such a position that he could accept little less than his election platform called for?

Was it not this same Lloyd George who, with implacable Clemenceau, jammed through the peace negotiations impossible reparations demands on Germany, and who helped to jettison President Wilson's Fourteen Points?

Was it not this same Lloyd George who pushed aside the advice of the American negotiators when they said that the harshness of the Versailles terms would inevitably lead to the rise of a German leader who would seek to throw off the oppressive treaty?

Yes, it was the same man, and not one whose record would seem to argue that he is best qualified to contribute to the question of a 1939 peace. Such a peace must be better than the peace of 1919, or it will have been scarcely worth the making.

Lloyd George wants the United States dealt a hand in any new peace conference "because you have there a great power whose interests are not European interests and which has not been involved in any of these disputes and quarrels."

Whether the United States might have any interest in the making of a general peace in Europe would depend largely on whether it proved to be a mere military armistice or a real settlement going to the root of economic, colonial, financial and armament problems in a truly international way.

That Woodrow Wilson once envisioned such a world settlement, and what happened to his hopes, and why it happened, no one is in a better position to remember than David Lloyd George. And if there should appear in the United States a certain reluctance to take another hand in that game, especially if there are any deuces wild, again Lloyd George is in the best possible position to understand.

Organization of the National Dunking Association in New York puts the cruller into the blue book. It also reminds us that not all the sinkers in the world are submarines.

BRUCE CATTON IN WASHINGTON

BY BRUCE CATTON
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON—The startling fact emerging from a comparison of the two measures is that the administration's proposed revision of the neutrality law is a far more stringent "isolationist" measure than the present law—with the single exception of the arms embargo clause.

Under the existing law, for instance, trade in munitions to belligerent nations is prohibited; but trade in other commodities—steel, oil, wheat, raw materials, and manufactured goods of all kinds—can go on freely, and may be carried in American ships.

Under the administration's proposal, no American vessel may carry any materials whatever to any warring nation, and no American business firm may export any materials whatever to any warring nation unless title to the goods is transferred to the purchaser before the shipment is made.

Under the present law, Americans may travel to belligerent nations on American ships. Under the administration's proposal, they could not travel to belligerent nations at all on American ships, nor could they ride on anybody else's ships if those ships have to pass through a "combat area."

The present neutrality law is not called into operation unless the President so decides. The administration's proposed revision would empower Congress to put the law into effect.

The cash-and-carry section of the administration proposal would require a feature which the administration promised to do last spring. Strictly speaking, it is not precisely a cash-and-carry section, since it provides for 90-day credits. In this, it is similar to the present ban on loans to warring nations, which excepts ordinary commercial credits and short-term obligations "customarily used in normal peacetime commercial transactions."

Almost the only point in which the administration's proposal would represent a relaxation of the present law, then, is in its clause which would permit the export of arms and munitions. As a tactical move, this may be of considerable importance in the fight in the Senate.

Administration leaders are now in a position to say to the isolationists, in effect: "If you're so anxious to keep the country out of war, why not take our plan? It would keep American ships and American cargoes out of the war zone completely; the present law keeps munitions out. We could be dragged into war through the torpedoing of American ships carrying wheat or cotton, under the present law; we couldn't, under our plan."

The isolationists, however, have their answer ready for that one: "Okay. Why not keep the arms embargo, and then take the other features of your plan, and be doubly sure that we're safe?"

What all of this boils down to, of course, is the fact that the arms embargo is the single important issue at stake. To get it lifted, the administration seems prepared to yield on practically everything else—and the isolationists will give up practically everything else to keep it.

New Cleaning Plant Opened In Ranger

Miles Mitchell of Weatherford has opened a new cleaning and pressing shop in Ranger, located on South Rusk Street, just off Main.

Mitchell stated today that he had only a part of his equipment here, at present, but was ready for business, and that the remainder was on its way.

Before coming to Ranger Mitchell operated cleaning and pressing shops in Weatherford, Mineral Wells and Corpus Christi, and had 12 years of experience.

"The shop is prepared to do cleaning, pressing, alterations of any kind, Mrs. Mitchell expects to aid in operation of the plant, doing part of the outside work, while Mitchell has charge of actual operation of the plant."
