Voters Battle in Streets at Heated Louisiana Primary

There was fighting in the streets down in old Louisiana as its Long political machine tussled at the polls with four "reform" candidates. James A. Noe, one of nominees in state's heated Democratic gubernatorial primary, figured in two street battles and was arrested.

COLD HAMPERS EUROPE'S WAR AGAIN TODAY

Cold weather in Europe doubled the hardships brought on because of the two major wars that are in progress, both for the soldiers on the front lines and for those who have remained at home. Despite the cold the Russians continued their slow withdrawal from the Salla front, where Finns had reported an encircling movement, but which they now admit was failing as the Russians had apparently avoided the same traps which had caused the downfall of the 162nd and 44th Russian divisions.

It was indicated that the withdrawal was more strategic on the part of the Russian forces than a forced retreat caused by Finnish counter attacks, and it was indicated that the Russians were much stronger in that area than the Finnish report had indicated. It is estimated that fully 40,000 Russian soldiers are engaged in the retreat, which has already covered more than 30 miles.

It is expected that, with the withdrawal completed, Soviet officials will keep a large number of troops massed across the border from the Salla front, in an effort to break through the Finnish waistline toward Norway with the coming of spring and warmer weather. It is here that the real test of Russian and Finnish strength is expected in the spring.

Three air raid alarms were sounded in Helsinki, with more than 200 explosions reported. The raids were on the north, west and east outskirts of the city, none of the planes reaching the central section of the city. The planes flew so high they could not be seen from Helsinki.

Meantime Russia sent a note of apology to Norway and Sweden in answer to protests about Russian planes flying over their frontiers.

Mail Seizure By Britain Extends To Airplane Mail

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—Protests that Great Britain over seizure of air mail by United States officials today by resentment over Britain's answer to the former protest lodged by the secretary of state.

Although state department officials withheld any comment upon Britain's reply to the protest, it was revealed that they held it as a violation of international law.

LONDON, Jan. 19.—Britain today announced that henceforth it would censor all air mail arriving in England from the United States, following up previous announcements that she would continue to seize and censor mail on the high seas, despite American protests.

Two of the initial shows are tentatively set for March 1 and 2 at Cisco and March 7 at Cisco, said Pratt.

There are 15 or 20 boys who have registered dairy cows and calves who will enter them in shows. Ten youths have from Morton Valley have registered hogs which they will enter in the exhibitions. Probably six boys will enter fat steers in the various shows, Pratt also stated. Many of the boys will take their stock to the Southwest Livestock Show, March 8 in Fort Worth.

The war is over for ill-clad Russian soldiers pictured at top. Captured by Finns, they enjoy solace of cigarettes in a prison camp. Grim death on frozen battlefields overtook many of their comrades—such as slain Russian pictured below. Mute evidence of his tragic story is bandage and scissors, foreground, indicating he tried to bandage his wounded foot, and box of matches nearby, with which he probably tried to light a fire before deadly cold and loss of blood ended his suffering. SIX DIE FROM BURNS DURING COLD WEATHER

At least six deaths were attributed to the cold in Texas today, with that number having been fatally burned in fires at Austin and Fort Worth.

British Probing London Explosion

LONDON, Jan. 19.—British Army Intelligence divisions joined Scotland Yard today in investigating possible sabotage in the blast which wrecked a North London powder plant Thursday, doing considerable damage and injuring scores of people.

The blast followed recent Irish Republican Army bombings, which have terrorized portions of London in recent months, and came on the heels of reported sabotage plots, originating in Germany which were supposed to be directed against bridges and railway stations in England.

Only 12 hours after the blast in London a similar explosion rocked Bogota, Colombia, where nine were injured.

Colombia officials denied that there was any hint of sabotage in the explosion there, however, stating that a short-circuited line was the cause of the accident.

LONDON, Jan. 19.—The British admiralty today stoutly denied that the port of Liverpool had been closed to shipping, or that any such move was being contemplated.

It was pointed out that the Nazi sea warfare was having but little effect upon British shipping, despite German claims, and that England was not really feeling the pinch.

Meantime word was received here that another freighter had been sunk in the North Sea by a German submarine.

Renovating the Defense Machine

No matter how hard Americans try, they can't forget there is war in Europe. One can't be casual about it. It pervades all our national life.

For a little while before the President sent his budget message to Congress, people in this country were beginning to look at the war as something purely objective, something associated with the United States only remotely.

Even though the war scene was brought closer to our front door, much of the fatalism concerning our eventual involvement had vanished. We had come to the conclusion that the war wouldn't touch us and that we needn't worry about it too much.

Then the President submitted his budget. Almost every item was clipped except one—national defense. The chief executive asked an appropriation of $1,800,000,000 for defense—more than was requested for any other program.

Even the $1,800,000,000 isn't as much as most observers had expected. But it's a good deal more than can be comfortably laughed off. On the basis of 130,000,000 people in this country, that comes to about $14 a head.

Although we haven't taken up arms, it's difficult for us to forget for long that the god of war is abroad again. Everything we do as a government, from now until the conflicts are settled, will be influenced by events abroad.

Making one's way in a world that is being shattered requires some pretty agile footwork. The United States government must be careful in everything that it does, but no more careful than every citizen within the country must be.

It is the series of small, unimportant incidents that can pile up and lead to a sudden explosion. We are still neutral—but the rights of a neutral nation aren't as exalted as we'd like them to be.

If we've got to spend $1,800,000,000 for a war machine—and we probably shall—let's keep the machine bright and shiny. Let's try never to find an occasion to use it.

Renovating the Defense Machine

No matter how hard Americans try, they can't forget there is war in Europe. One can't be casual about it. It pervades all our national life. It hangs over us like a persistent ghost, and it's pretty hard to shrug your shoulders at a ghost.

For a little while before the President sent his budget message to Congress, people in this country were beginning to look at the war as something purely objective, something associated with the United States only remotely. The Christmas season helped that feeling along a little. We were sympathetic toward Finland, contemptuous of Russia. We sighed when the Graf Spee sunk off the coast of Uruguay and were grateful that the whole nasty incident didn't happen in some United States port.

Even though the war scene was brought closer to our front door, much of the fatalism concerning our eventual involvement had vanished. We had come to the conclusion that the war wouldn't touch us and that we needn't worry about it too much.

Then the President submitted his budget. Almost every item was clipped except one—national defense. The chief executive asked an appropriation of $1,800,000,000 for defense—more than was requested for any other program. The unfortunate aspect of the whole thing is that we've got to spend money for defense, whether we'll need it or not. As a matter of fact, the more we spend, the less likely may be our need for it.

Even the $1,800,000,000 isn't as much as most observers had expected. But it's a good deal more than can be comfortably laughed off. On the basis of 130,000,000 people in this country, that comes to about $14 a head. To help meet this item, about 469,000,000 in new taxes must be raised, preferably, the President asked, through a super income tax plan.

Although we haven't taken up arms, it's difficult for us to forget for long that the god of war is abroad again. Everything we do as a government, from now until the conflicts are settled, will be influenced by events abroad. We are not self-sufficient; the world means a good deal to us.

Making one's way in a world that is being shattered requires some pretty agile footwork. The United States government must be careful in everything that it does, but no more careful than every citizen within the country must be.

It is the series of small, unimportant incidents that can pile up and lead to a sudden explosion. We are still neutral—but the rights of a neutral nation aren't as exalted as we'd like them to be. Many of the routine things we do as a matter of course in time of peace are banned or restricted when war gets under way.

If we've got to spend $1,800,000,000 for a war machine—and we probably shall—let's keep the machine bright and shiny. Let's try never to find an occasion to use it.

Long Sermons Go On Despite Alarm

By United Press
SCOTCHTOWN, N. Y.—This little rural hamlet is abuzz with a problem—how to stop a clergyman's overlong sermons in time for Sunday dinner.

Rev. Dr. Alexander J. Kerr, 57 years a minister, has remained adamant and undisturbed, even after a trustee brought an alarm clock to the Presbyterian Church. Parishioners have clocked the pastor's sermons up to a half-hour over the scheduled noon close of Sunday worship. Simmering dinners simmer overtime, housewives said.

Pleas unavailing, a trustee and his wife brought the alarm clock to service, set it for 12:06 p. m., and walked out when the tripped.

Renovating the Defense Machine

No matter how hard Americans try, they can't forget there is war in Europe. One can't be casual about it. It pervades all our national life. It hangs over us like a persistent ghost, and it's pretty hard to shrug your shoulders at a ghost.

For a little while before the President sent his budget message to Congress, people in this country were beginning to look at the war as something purely objective, something associated with the United States only remotely. The Christmas season helped that feeling along a little. We were sympathetic toward Finland, contemptuous of Russia. We sighed when the Graf Spee sunk off the coast of Uruguay and were grateful that the whole nasty incident didn't happen in some United States port.

Even though the war scene was brought closer to our front door, much of the fatalism concerning our eventual involvement had vanished. We had come to the conclusion that the war wouldn't touch us and that we needn't worry about it too much.

Then the President submitted his budget. Almost every item was clipped except one—national defense. The chief executive asked an appropriation of $1,800,000,000 for defense—more than was requested for any other program. The unfortunate aspect of the whole thing is that we've got to spend money for defense, whether we'll need it or not. As a matter of fact, the more we spend, the less likely may be our need for it.

Even the $1,800,000,000 isn't as much as most observers had expected. But it's a good deal more than can be comfortably laughed off. On the basis of 130,000,000 people in this country, that comes to about $14 a head. To help meet this item, about 469,000,000 in new taxes must be raised, preferably, the President asked, through a super income tax plan.

Although we haven't taken up arms, it's difficult for us to forget for long that the god of war is abroad again. Everything we do as a government, from now until the conflicts are settled, will be influenced by events abroad. We are not self-sufficient; the world means a good deal to us.

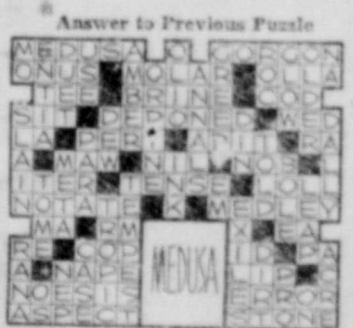

Making one's way in a world that is being shattered requires some pretty agile footwork. The United States government must be careful in everything that it does, but no more careful than every citizen within the country must be.

It is the series of small, unimportant incidents that can pile up and lead to a sudden explosion. We are still neutral, but the rights of a neutral nation aren't as exalted as we'd like them to be. Many of the routine things we do as a matter of course in time of peace are banned or restricted when war gets under way.

If we've got to spend $1,800,000,000 for a war machine—and we probably shall—let's keep the machine bright and shiny. Let's try never to find an occasion to use it.

SERIAL STORY

BLACKOUT

BY RUTH AYERS

COPYRIGHT, 1939, NEA SERVICE, INC.

YESTERDAY: Even when she agrees to Vincent's plea that they start over again, forgetting the Moravia and the weeks that followed, Mary knows something is lacking. Gilbert comes home unexpectedly, he is delighted to find Mary's beauty restored. Mary tells him she intends marrying Vincent and Gilbert agrees. As he leaves, Mary knows she loves Gilbert, not Vincent.

CHAPTER XXII

IN the same instant she knew she loved Gilbert Lenox, Mary Carroll realized her first loyalty was to Vincent Gregg.

They had been engaged and she'd promised to marry him when she was free. Gilbert had a brilliant career ahead of him and Vincent had nothing but her. Vincent needed her.

The newspaper she had brought home lay tossed aside on the table, its importance forgotten in the overwhelming surprise of Gilbert's return. Now in the sudden loneliness of the room after Gilbert's departure, Mary momentarily awaited Vincent's arrival. She must talk to him about this turn of events which would make her a witness in the reopening of the Moravia investigation.

When he didn't appear for their usual tea, she decided to stroll towards Trafalgar Square to meet him.

In the streets, the ever-present clamor of war defense could not be overlooked. You had to watch lest you fall into a dug-out or be snatched for a sandbag. A light in the air, a floating mass of silver testified the existence of the Royal Air Force. There had gone but a few minutes when a chauffeur-driven car pulled up beside her.

"Lenox, I'd like to speak to you," a voice called from the car.

She looked up, startled. She saw a face to face with Carla Marchetta. But there was nothing about Carla. Her smile, her eyes, was disarming.

"Must forgive me," Carla said. "For this informal way of calling on you. I was, in fact, coming to your address when I happened to see you."

"What do you want?" Mary asked.

"I want to talk to you about something that concerns all of us. Will you come with me to my house?"

Mary hesitated. Fear of Carla held her back, but the magnetism of the woman drew her on. After all, she was a friend of Vincent's. Why should Mary be afraid?

Before she realized she might be involving herself, she stepped into the limousine. But when she saw Carla exchange a look with her chauffeur, Mary felt she had been hasty about accepting the invitation.

CARLA chatted amiably. "I know all about you from Vincent. What a miracle it was that you're alive after that terrible disaster!"

The car drew up to a side entrance in Mayfair. The chauffeur helped them out. The house was far more luxurious than Mary had expected.

"We'll go upstairs to the drawing room," Carla directed. With a smile she turned to the chauffeur. "Will you bring us tea?" To Mary again she explained, "During wartime, I've had to cut down my staff. Felix is my man of all work."

Upstairs a fire was blazing in the richly ornamented fireplace.

"You wanted to talk about Vincent?" Mary asked when they were seated.

"Yes," Carla answered. "I feel like in very grave danger."

"Danger? How? From what?" Mary was alarmed.

Carla smiled pityingly. "Vincent is a very indiscreet young man," she replied. "For both your sakes, I believe it would be better if you did not testify when the Moravia investigation is reopened."

"But I must," Mary spoke with spirit. "I almost lost my life and if I can help in any way to prevent other lives being lost I'm going to do all I can."

A silver tray laden with a handsome tea service was brought in. Felix had changed his whipcord jacket to a starched, white coat.

Mary saw him look at Carla searchingly. Almost imperceptibly he nodded his head. Then:

"There's a call for you on the wire."

"Will you excuse me?" Carla asked Mary. "Felix will pour your tea."

MARY sat before the crackling fire sipping her tea. Her hands shook and the cup slipped, spilling tea on the rug. A fresh feeling of alarm had flooded her with Carla's warning of Vincent's danger. Carla Marchetta had always been able to fill her with a sense of foreboding.

But despite all this she found herself relaxing. Drowsiness began to steal over her, a strange numbing drowsiness. She tried to fight it off. She wanted to stand up. But she could not rise from her chair.

HOURS must have passed. It was dark. Mary woke from a heavy, dreamless sleep. Where was she? She had no way to guess.

With the sharpening of senses that danger brings, Mary strained her ears. What she heard was so shocking, so unbelievable, she was fully awake at once! Carla's voice, high pitched and commanding, Felix's lower tones. Something about a ship. Mary held her breath.

She must get away on the instant.

Outside her room were sounds of hurried packing, the flurry of footsteps back and forth.

She heard a man's voice: "What are we going to do with the girl?"

"We'll take her with us," Carla Marchetta spoke sharply.

"To Bristol? To Von Blum's? You're crazy. Von Blum's not asking us for week-end party."

"Lock her in then. She's got enough opiate in her to keep her unconscious for another 12 hours. We'll be safe by then."

"How about Vincent?"

"Vincent can take care of himself. Did you send that message?"

"Certainly. Static on the time signal."

MARY heard a key turn in her door. There was the sound of departing footsteps on the stairs and in the hallway below. An outside door closed. Then all was silent.

Despite her reeling head and weakness, she managed a few faltering steps. What she had heard was so unmistakable that she knew at last Carla Marchetta's role in the spy ring posing the enemy on British maritime orders.

Mary was trapped in the room locked and barred. She went to a window. The deserted street was far below. Even if she could scream no one would hear her.

Then she had an intuitive flash. She groped for the light switch. The blackout might save her.

SERIAL STORY

BLACKOUT

BY RUTH AYERS

COPYRIGHT, 1939, NEA SERVICE, INC.

YESTERDAY: Mary meets Carla Marchetta. Carla warns her Vincent is in danger. Mary's tea is drugged, but she spits half of it and awakens before Carla had planned. Mary is locked in a room. She overhears Carla and her chauffeur hurrying to escape. A mysterious message has been sent. Mary listens, hears more that confirms her belief that Carla heads a spy ring. She must capture Carla. A sudden thought—the flicks on the light switch.

CHAPTER XXIII

AS Mary had hoped, the lights brought help. Almost out of nowhere warden and chin-strapped London bobbies came running.

She could hear them in the street below and then on the front steps and pounding at the door. "Lights showing. Turn them off!" a dozen voices called at once.

It did not take them long to discover that something was wrong. She heard the door crash open and thick-soled boots came pounding up the steps to the second floor.

"I'm locked in," she called when she heard them in the hall outside.

"Put those lights out," she was commanded.

She had barely turned off the switch when they crashed into the room. A shadowed light cut the blackness.

"Quick! Take me to Scotland Yard!" she commanded before they had time to challenge her for violating blackout rules. "I must see Inspector Babcock at once."

OUTSIDE, a taxi was commandeered and Mary found herself accompanied by a warden and a bobby en route to Scotland Yard. The cab crawled through the darkened streets.

It seemed interminable before he was face to face with the inspector. She introduced herself. Babcock had no difficulty in placing her.

"The airplane carrier, Regency, is to be torpedoed," she told him. "Enemy spies already know when she leaves Scapa Flow."

Inspector Babcock was electrified.

"Do you know what you're saying?" he demanded.

Mary became suddenly calm. She managed to marshal her thoughts and her words.

"I was kidnaped today by Carla Marchetta and her chauffeur," she was saying. "They took me to her house in Mayfair. They drugged me but I came to before they expected. I distinctly heard Carla order Felix, the chauffeur, to inform the enemy of the sailing time of the Regency from Scapa Flow. Something about static on a time signal. That ship will be torpedoed."

"Go on," the inspector motioned. "They gloated about it. They intend leaving England. They're on their way to Bristol now in Carla's limousine."

Vaguely, Mary knew a call was being put through to the Admiralty. Orders were dispatched to a dozen different officers.

At last Inspector Babcock turned to her.

"Tell me all you know about this," he spoke quietly.

His request made Mary realize the enormity of what she had done. She knew she had gone too far to keep Vincent out of it. She saw his name must come in—connection with the Moravia, at least. Although she knew in her heart she loved Gilbert Lenox, if she betrayed Vincent she would have to stand by him. She leaned toward the inspector.

"Vincent Gregg, an American aviator, is innocently involved in this. If I've done anything to help, will you help him?"

Inspector Babcock studied her. "I can't make any promises. But I'll help if I can."

Mary's long narrative commenced with the air raid and the dinner in the restaurant when Carla and Vincent had first been linked. She told briefly of the Moravia and her suspicion that Vincent had been the one who had unwittingly revealed to Carla the secret time of sailing. When she came to the last horrible chapter, she broke down in sobs.

The story was interrupted by the insistent telephone. The Admiralty called back several times for Inspector Babcock. Reports came through from the Yard's own operators, all along the route to Bristol. After one of these calls the inspector nodded his head as if satisfied.

Mary felt relieved in the knowledge of what she had done to save the lives of a thousand British seamen. She was fully reassured when the inspector said:

"You've done the country a great service. The Regency's sailing has been canceled."

He leaned back and regarded her thoughtfully. "In view of what you've done, I'll make every effort to save your friend. He'll be brought in for questioning and will be interned for the duration of the war. But I don't think you need worry about a fine squad."

Daylight was coming through the barred windows of the inspector's office when the long wait was over. A chair scraped. Inspector Babcock stood up.

"Is this the woman?"

In the doorway, handcuffed a Scotland Yard man, was Carla Marchetta!

Rapier-like, her eyes flashed at Mary.

OUTSIDE the sun of early morning struggled with the fog. The clasp of her handcuffs sounded unreal after the events of the night.

Mary started toward Trafalgar Square but found she was an entirely different person. Without knowing it she had followed the dictates of her heart. She had to see Gilbert Lenox once.

At the hospital she was shown into a waiting room. It was a minute—and then—the sight of Gilbert's serious face.

"I had to see you. There's something I must tell you. I can't tell you here to start. Wait for me to go on. She took back her head, the malice-ripples of her hair brushing her shoulders.

"No matter what happens, I began slowly. "I want you to believe this. I love you."

There was a puzzled expression on Gilbert's face. He took a closer look. Then his eyes lighted with unbelievable happiness.

"Oh, my darling. This is what I've wanted—what I've waited for. I've never stopped loving you since we were married. We'll be married in church and then I'll go back home as soon as I've finished my service in France."

Mary drew away. It was agonizing—this knowing that happened was right beside her and she couldn't reach for it. "No, I can't be your wife," she said faintly. "This is the end—goodbye. Tomorrow, I'd have given up Vincent for you, but now—well, it's too late. Vincent is to be arrested and interned for the rest of the war. Her words reached him. "But I'll free you!"

She shook her head. A smile came to her lips. "The strange thing about it," she whispered. "Vincent's been foolishly involved in a naval spy ring. I was the one who disclosed. So you see, I can't walk out on him now."

Federal Food Stamp Plan Operation In County Is Sought at Eastland

Eastland County, is hopeful that efforts to secure operation of the new Federal Food Stamp Plan will soon become successful. Work in securing the new plan in Eastland County has been in progress for one month. At present a questionnaire is being prepared by the Eastland Chamber of Commerce through relief agencies for submission to plans officials. The plan, according to reports in cities where it has been operated on experimental basis, is a business bonanza and is a much better way for disposing of federal surplus commodities. The food stamp plan, is the government's new effort to bridge the gap between a surplus of commodities and hunger and poverty. There are two kinds of food stamps. The first stamps, which cost money, may be used to purchase anything usually sold in a grocery, including such items as soap and soap, but are not good for alcoholic beverages, tobacco, food and drinks usually consumed at the store. If a person is on direct relief or on WPA's list but not assigned to work, the government through a local agency allows $2 worth of blue stamps for each member of his family each month. If a person is an old age pensioner in sufficient need, he may get $2 worth of free blue stamps. If a person is an old age pensioner with sufficient income he may secure a dollar's worth of orange
