They Found No Peace

After browsing around among plausible candidates, the Nobel Prize committee, in November, announced curtly that the 1939 peace award would be withheld.

The committee has now received a proposal from Sven Shedin, noted Swedish explorer, that both the 1939 and 1940 peace prizes, aggregating about $90,000, be used to help the Finns in their war with Russia.

The mere suggestion of turning peace funds into war capital is a didactic commentary on the world of today. Of all contemporary leaders, not one can be found great enough to deserve the world's highest peace award. Only Pope Pius XII has consistently and unreservedly demanded peace. Other leaders have asked for it, but their efforts have been spasmodic.

In his letter to President Roosevelt, Pope Pius wrote: "Our own daily experience tells us of the deep-seated yearning for peace that fills the hearts of the common people."

Yes, the common people want peace. But they can find few real champions for their cause.

Ladies Don't Carry Guns

Uncle Sam had better do something soon. We've just let an honest woman slip through our fingers. We're sending her back to Canada because she wouldn't agree, under oath, to bear arms for the United States.

Mrs. Alice Signe Aune was allowed to enter the country under the agreement that she would file citizenship papers here. She said she would assist the government in any other way—even as a war nurse—but she wouldn't shoulder a gun.

Mrs. Aune isn't the only woman who feels that way. Most of the others we've admitted wouldn't touch a gun, even though they've casually said they would. And Uncle Sam would have to look a long time to find a corps of native-born American women who would shoulder muskets.

The fact is, he doesn't expect them to. That question applies to men applicants for citizenship. In cases such as that of Mrs. Aune, the United States looks a little absurd. It will be a lot better to modify the immigration laws before this sort of thing happens again.

Od King Cole called for his pipe and his bowl and for his fiddlers three. Governor Long of Louisiana calls for his legislature.

In days long past, they were pirates. Today, they are officers and gentlemen searching for contraband.

The movement to break off diplomatic relations with Russia gains momentum. Only Communists and vodka drinkers are against it.

After 25 years, a woman paid five cents for a valentine she pilfered when she was a small girl. Maybe the boy sent it to finally get around to popping the question.

The Solid South

"OUT OUR WAY" By Williams

Poultry Work Of Girl Is Described

The following is a report on a successful 4-H club poultry demonstration conducted by Betty Walker of Rising Star, who wrote the story:

The chickens for my demonstration were bought in April, 1939. They were six weeks old when purchased. I bought 25 pullets. I have raised all except two of these.

The total cost for feeding these chickens was $17.50. These chickens were fed chicken started until the last part of July, then I started feeding them laying mash.

The chickens were exhibited in the Eastland County Fair at Eastland. I made $4.50 in prize money, winning first prize on a hen which consisted of one cockerel and four pullets; first on my individual pullet, and second place on a hen in the pen. After the Eastland Fair my chickens were carried to the Abilene Free Fall Fair. Here they won $10.00 in prize money. I won first on a pen which consisted of one cockerel and two pullets; first on one pullet, second on another pullet, and third on other pullets. I won first place again for having the best pen of the whole show and second on one hen for having the second best hen of all the show.

After the shows I was offered $10.00 for my cockerel and $5.00 each for my five pullets. I decided I could make more by keeping these chickens and selling eggs than I could by selling them and buying some more.

These chickens started laying Aug. 4. Since Aug. 4 until Dec. 31 these chickens have laid 1,714 eggs. In August they laid 242; September 315; October 492; November 140, and in December 325 eggs.

My oldest brother wins so many prizes on his cattle, so I thought I could win as many prizes and have as much fun as he could if I had something to carry to all the shows. Now you can see what a grand time I am having, and learning about chickens is really fun.

To people who think there is not much money in raising chickens, all I can say is get some pure-bred chickens and raise them correctly and see for yourself.

SERIAL STORY

THE CAPTAIN'S DAUGHTER

BY HELEN WORDEN

COPYRIGHT, 1940, N.Y. SERVICE, INC.

YESTERDAY, Dan practically... CHAPTER VI

BAT LA PORTE put down his... "I hear strange noises on the dock," he told his wife.

"About 7. It's half-past five..." Mrs. La Porte stepped toward the kitchen.

Bat never heard the question... He was too occupied by another problem.

"What stuff is this that you... "What do you want for supper?"

"It's no use, Bat," he said, not unkindly.

"You're outnumbered. If you'd gone a little easier on me last night, I might not have done this."

"You're stealing the cargo meant for my boat tomorrow."

"Tommy spoke up sharply. 'Go easy on that word 'stealing'."

"Bat prepared to fling at them every word of abuse he knew in French as well as English.

"Bat sprang at Tommy. 'You try to steal my cargo the way you would my daughter.'"

"The truckman dodged him. 'Careful, Bat. I haven't lost my temper yet. I might be mean if I did.' He half-turned toward the sack he had put down, then stopped.

"What do my private feelings count for?" His continued antagonism was apparent.

"Only this," Tommy spoke eagerly. "I'll call the fellows off this deal and let you pack the phosphate on the Molly if you'll bury the past and give Marie'me your blessing."

"Are you out of your mind?" shrieked Bat. "The fellow doesn't live who's good enough for my Marie. I'd rather see her dead than married to you."

Lowering his head, bull-like, he grabbed Tommy round the middle and prepared to throw him bodily off the dock.

Tommy gave a yell. The other men dropped their loads and ran toward the two, shouting.

THE noise of the fight had aroused other barge people. Heads poked out of hatchways from boats on both sides of the dock.

"Bat La Porte needs help," cried a big Irishman on a barge nearest the fray. "It's them damned truckmen again."

"And they're stealing my cargo and trying to lead it on a pirate barge," roared Bat, falling back as Tommy pried himself loose.

All the old rivalry between the canalboat people and the truckmen flared up again. It had been seething ever since ice had begun to break in the river. Now, the feud, which dated back to the World War when trucking started cutting in on barge-hauling, was on in earnest.

Last night's skirmish was as nothing compared to the battle this evening.

In the confusion Tommy and his men finished loading the pirate barge. It slipped silently out while Bat and the other bargemen were still fighting. Bat turned in time to see its black bulk disappear down the river under its own power.

"We're all fools," he bellowed. "They finished loading that cargo while we were fighting these idiots."

"Bat prepared to fling at them every word of abuse he knew in French as well as English. But before he could form a single phrase, the truckers fled down South Street. The cause was apparent. A police siren shrieked. For a few moments it seemed to be heading straight for Pier 6, then it grew fainter and finally faded entirely.

(To Be Continued)

BAT felt of his left eye. It was swollen shut. He lumbered toward the Molly. If it weren't for his black eye he might have recognized Marie turning into the pier from South Street.

He inquired, strolling casually toward the pier as they paused under the arc-light.

Dan grabbed her by both arms. "Are you this fellow's girl?"

Marie turned her back on Tommy. "Please go, I beg you. I'm afraid you'll be hurt."

Tommy, hands in his pockets and cap pulled down over his eyes, stood silently by, a sinister figure in the half-light from above.

Dan gripped Marie's arm till she winced. "Do you belong to this man?"

"No, but for God's sake go," she begged. "Leave this girl alone," Dan said, turning to Tommy, "and that goes for all time. I know you won't mind."

He spoke as one accustomed to giving orders. "But I do mind." Tommy's tones had an edge. "I take orders from no one, least of all from a guy like you."

"He swung a fist upward. 'Tommy,' Marie screamed. 'You're acting like a caveman.' Dan dodged and laughed. 'I don't fight before ladies. See you later.'"

HALF-HYSTERICAL, Marie caught Dan by the hand and led him toward the Molly, with but one idea in mind, to get him out of Tommy's reach.

"Here's my home," she said. "Will you come aboard and meet my people?"

The tide was going out and the barge was far below the dock level. Marie jumped to the Molly's deck. Dan followed her toward the hatchway. It was shoved back. Bat's head appeared in the opening.

"I've got company, pop," Marie called.

Bat turned one eye on Dan. His other eye was swollen shut. "Bring him in and let's look him over."

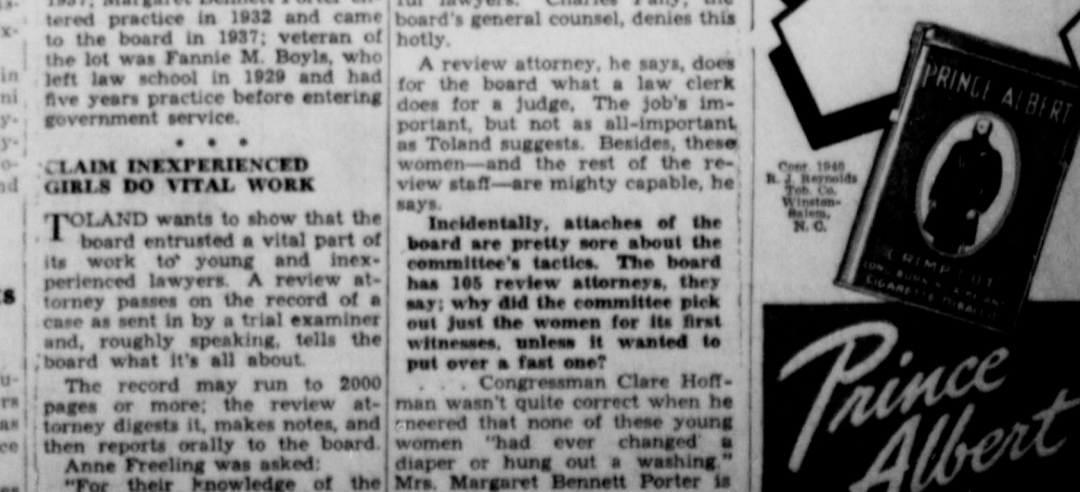

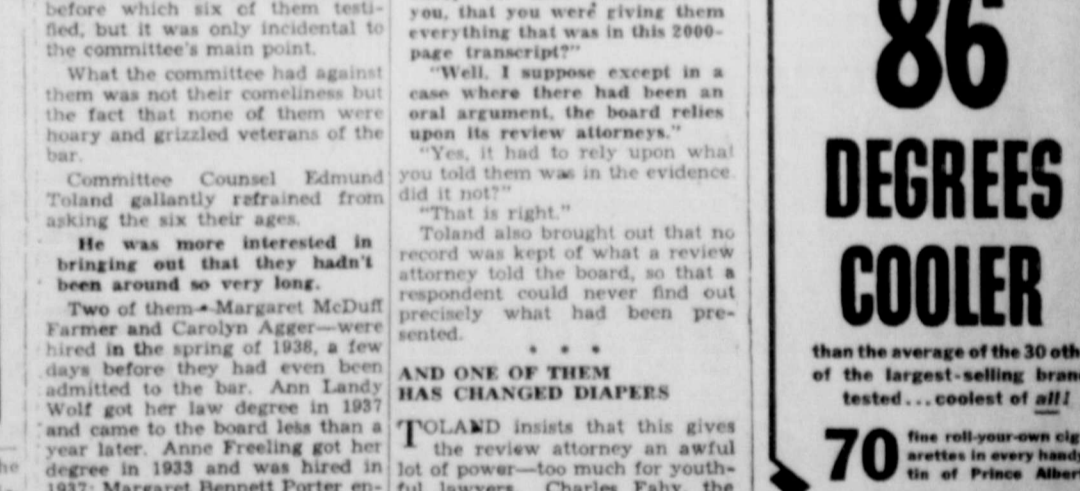

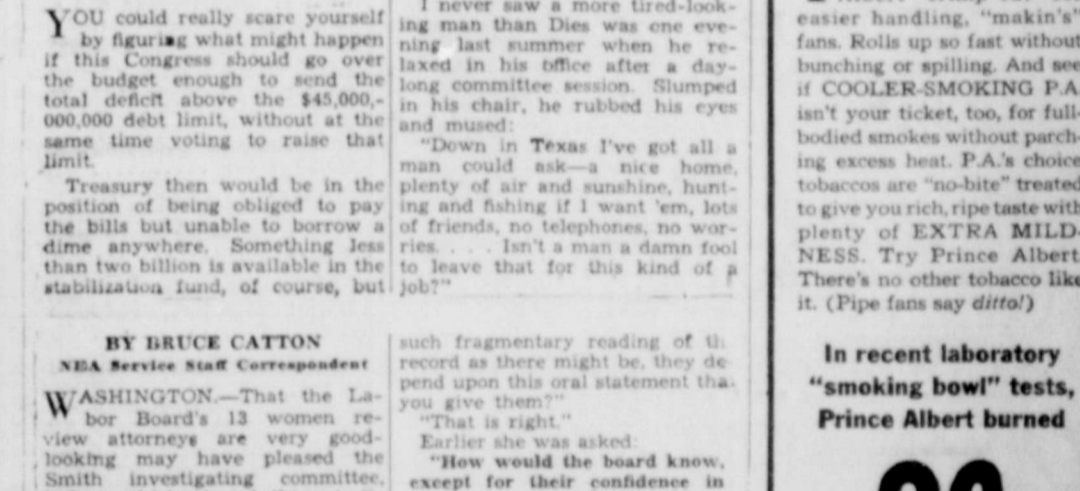

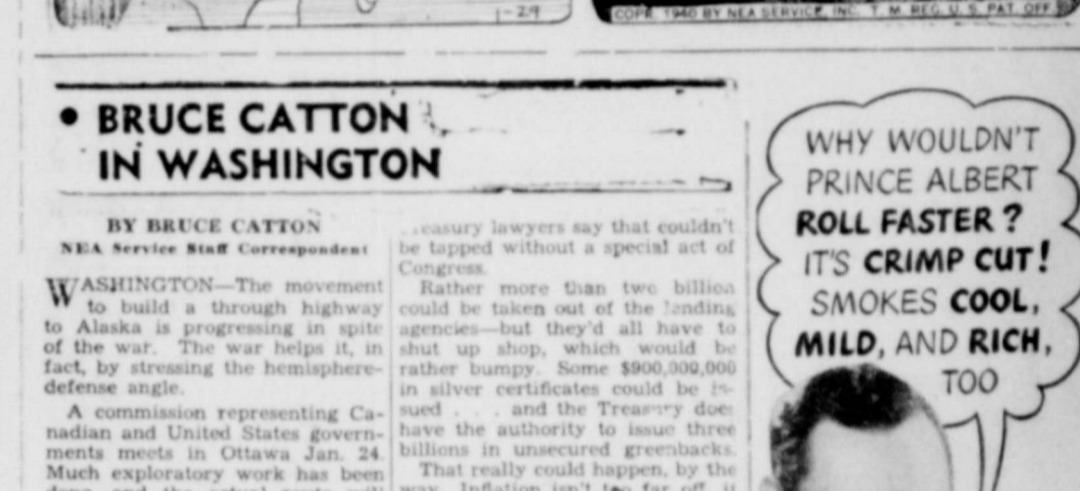

As Dan and Marie disappeared down the hatchway with Bat, Tommy Ryan led the sheltering truck and walked slowly toward the Baptiste barge.

BRUCE CATTON IN WASHINGTON

BY BRUCE CATTON NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON—The movement to build a through highway to Alaska is progressing in spite of the war. The war helps it, in fact, by stressing the hemisphere-defense angle.

A commission representing Canadian and United States governments meets in Ottawa Jan. 24. Much exploratory work has been done, and the actual route will probably be chosen at this meeting. Then ground parties will go out to determine costs.

Congressman Warren Magnuson of Washington, chairman of the commission, hopes a definite dollars-and-cents proposal can be offered Congress and the Canadian parliament within a year. Current estimates, he says, run to about $20,000,000 and call for a 24-foot gravel-surfaced road tying U. S. highways to the existing highway system in Alaska.

One scheme being considered is to have Canada build the road across Yukon territory, with U. S. funds helping on the 400-500 mile section in British Columbia.

HERE'S THE DEBT LEMIT HEADACHE

YOU could really scare yourself by figuring what might happen if this Congress should go over the budget enough to send the total deficit above $45,000,000,000 debt limit, without at the same time voting to raise that limit.

Treasury then would be in the position of being obliged to pay the bills but unable to borrow a dime anywhere. Something less than two billion is available in the stabilization fund, of course, but such fragmentary reading of the record as there might be, they depend upon this oral statement that you give them."

Earlier she was asked: "How would the board know, except for their confiding in you, that you were giving them everything that was in this 2000-page transcript?"

"Well, I suppose except in a case where there had been an oral argument, the board relies upon its review attorneys."

"Yes, it had to rely upon what you told them was in the evidence did it not?"

"That is right." Toland also brought out that no record was kept of what a review attorney told the board, so that a respondent could never find out precisely what had been presented.

AND ONE OF THEM HAS CHANGED DIAPIRES TOLAND insists that this gives the review attorney an awful lot of power—too much for youthful lawyers. Charles Fahy, the board's general counsel, denies this hotly.

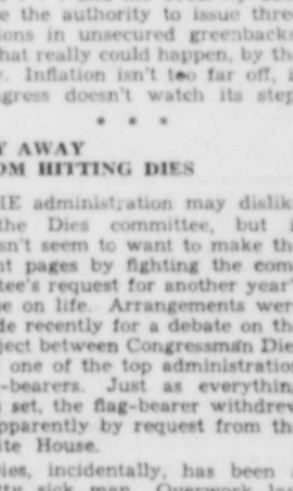

A review attorney, he says, does for the board what a law clerk does for a judge. The job's important, but not as important, as Toland suggests. Besides, these women—and the rest of the review staff—are mighty capable, he says.

Incidentally, attaches of the board are pretty sure about the committee's tactics. The board has 168 review attorneys, they say; why did the committee pick out just the women for its first witnesses, unless it wanted to put over a fast one?

Congressman Clare Hoffman wasn't quite correct when he sneered that none of these young women "had ever changed a diaper or hung out a washing." Mrs. Margaret Bennett Porter is the mother of twins.

Entertainment To Be Held Here By School Wednesday

The Lucille Elmore company will appear in Ranger Public Schools on Tuesday, January 30, at 3:00 p. m., according to an announcement by W. T. Walton.

David Hartley and Lucille Elmore present one of the most delightful programs of the year. Hartley is an artist in his own right, a pianist with an individual style, a violinist of exceptional tone with a repertoire ranging from the classics to unique modern arrangements, and possessing a pleasing baritone voice.

Miss Elmore, petite comedienne, less than five feet tall, is noted for her child impersonations as well as characters old and young. She appeared with her famous cousin, Fred Stone, in musical comedy successes and stepped from the stage into a company of her own. She is the true exponent of high type entertainment which meets with popular and enduring favor.

As a little girl, a mechanical doll from the toy shop shelf that must be wound up to sing, an old-fashioned girl in hoop skirt, or a belle of the gay nineties, she is the embodiment of grace, charm and vivacious wit. As a ventriloquist, she carries on a rapid fire conversation with her two animated companions using three distinct voices.

The Chicago Tribune has written, "Miss Lucille Elmore has played ingenue roles with Fred Stone, her famous cousin, in such musical comedy successes as 'Tip Top', and 'Stepping Stones.' It is evident that she shares the family cleverness and humor." Mr. Stone himself says, "Lucille Elmore, a young cousin of mine, was very clever in our show 'Stepping Stones.'"

This is truly a program of grand entertainment and spontaneous fun with a proper blending of dignity. A hit in the South and the Southwest during the 1937-38 season, they are being brought back at the insistent demand of many schools, remaining five states.

Among the things she has tried are milking cows, cooking, working on a dude ranch, washing greens and working in a cannery. In South Carolina she sought a job in the textile industry.

Leased Ranch Covers An Aleutian Island

KODIAK, Alaska.—C. C. Eubank of Ogden, Utah, believes he operates the biggest sheep ranch on the North American continent.

He holds a lease from the U. S. government on all of Unnak island in the Aleutian archipelago. His domain is 85 miles long and in some places 11 miles wide.

Over this "pasture" range 12-16,000 sheep, 800 to 1,000 reindeer and large numbers of horses and cattle.

The island contains three mountains—one of them 7,900 feet high. Last year, according to the president and general manager of the Aleutian Livestock Co., the firm marketed 103,000 pounds of wool.
