Trading Pan American Culture

Fifty years of Pan Americanism will be celebrated April 14, and the peoples of 21 republics in North and South America will pause briefly to reflect on the importance of string alliances as protecting bonds among countries in the Western Hemisphere. Commemorative exercises will be held throughout the United States during the week of April 8-15, and, by presidential proclamation, Sunday, April 14, has been set aside as Pan American Day.

This may be a pretty good time to consider what we can get out of swapping ideas and culture with Latin America. We in the United States have always been a little egotistical about our way of life, and it is good that we should be so. We are firmly convinced that ours is the best civilization on the face of the earth—and it is, of course, for us. But we must be careful not to try to impose our own ideas on countries south of the border. We must appreciate the fact that both our culture and our political system may be wholly unadaptable for South or Central American nations.

It's all right for us to like the music of Paul Whiteman. But so is it all right for South Americans to like Julio Martinez Oyanguren's guitar music. We think highly of Victor Herbert but Brazilians are just as proud of their opera composer, Carlos Gomez.

Basically, we're satisfied with the kind of government we have and with the way we handle social problems. The Latin American members of the Pan American Union are democracies, and that's all that is important. Their forms of democracy may look different from ours, but they have been evolved to meet the conditions and needs of the people. When better forms of government become apparent, they will be adopted. Our co-operation with Latin America doesn't depend upon our virtually annexing the other republics.

Just as we have always traded ideas with Europe, so we can do it with the countries to the south. But it must be trading—on an equal basis. It must not be done as a missionary venture. We must recognize the fact that even the most primitive colony in the remotest part of the world has a civilization of its own that is entirely satisfactory to its people. There's a lot we can get from South America. There's a good deal we can give. It is to this give-and-take process we should dedicate ourselves fully in our ensuing relations with our neighbors.

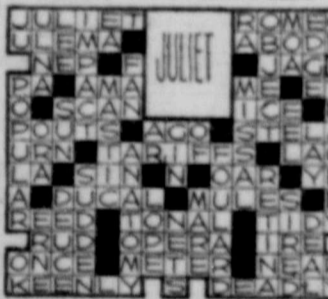

Adolphe Menjou is scheduled to play the leading role in a film based on John Barrymore's life. Maybe Barrymore himself just isn't the type.

A southern mailman had a hard time finding the post-office and no one would tell him where it was. This is the season for resenting questions asked by government representatives.

ELECTRICITY GIVES HER WORKLESS WASHDAYS!

● Of all the boons of electric service, few are as greatly appreciated by women as the freedom electricity gives her from the weekly drudgery of washing the family's clothes.

New and more efficient electric washers and speedy electric ironers have cut down the actual work of washing and ironing to minutes instead of hours. Electricity has reduced the small amount of work to be done to such simple and easy tasks as turning a switch or feeding the flatwork into the ironer.

Drop by a store which sells electric washers and ironers and see for yourself how you too can have "workless washdays." And when you own this new equipment, you'll find that a few pennies a week is all it costs for electricity to do the backbreaking work formerly done by hand.

Electricity FREES Her from this Job

- About 1/4 cent an hour is all it costs for electricity to operate a washer, which saves clothes and does better work than is possible to do by hand.
- An electric ironer takes all the hand work out of this weekly job. You sit down and let tireless electricity do all the hard work.

It's Maple Sap Time For Ohio

By United Press
CHARDON, O.—March means maple sugar time for Chardon, one of the country's largest producing sections. Sap buckets hang on hundreds of tree trunks and farmers are setting up sugar camps and cleaning kettles and vats in preparation for the "harvest." The syrup and sugar which are made near here will account for most of the production in Ohio, third largest maple sugar state. Although the maple sap has been slow in beginning to flow this spring, large crowds are anticipated at Geauga county's 3th annual maple festival, March 28-31. Paul Denton, secretary of the group sponsoring the festival, said it was hoped that last year's attendance record of 140,000 would be broken. He said the popularity of the festival was due to the fact that emphasis was placed on nature during the celebration. "Out attendance shows that people want an attraction which is entirely original," Denton explained, "and for that reason we are barring all sideshows and county fair attractions. This show is strictly confined to mother nature."

The festival originated as a celebration to mark the end of the maple gathering season. The whole town of Chardon dresses up. Townspeople put on oldtime costumes which they have stored away in attics. "Of course, since the purpose of the show is to create a demand for Geauga county's maple products," Denton said, "we are going to tap a number of trees in Chardon park and set up sugar camps right on the spot to show visitors how syrup is made. "After all, this is one of the greatest maple syrup producing regions in the world, and brings approximately $300,000 to this county in an average year." Events at the festival include a

WASHINGTON.—There is quite likely to be a broad Congressional investigation of racketeering in organized labor this spring. To vote by either House of Congress is necessary to bring such an investigation about. A committee exists with the power, the money and the time to do the job. And there is reason to believe that it will presently be giving the matter serious thought. This is the so-called Smith committee—the group of five congressmen headed by Howard Smith of Virginia—which has been investigating the record of the National Labor Relations Board during the past few months. City Housing Is Delayed By Woman Making Up Mind

By United Press
ANNISTON, Ala.—A little old woman who lives in a shack threatens to hold up construction of Anniston's $414,000 housing project—until she finds a new home. Mrs. Sallie Myers, 75-year-old relief client, refuses to move from the ramshackle house in which she lived for many years unless suitable quarters are found elsewhere. She lives alone in the house, whose rooms are stuffed with odds and ends accumulated as she eked out a living gathering coal down by the railroad tracks. There are two dogs, and two cats to keep her company. At the rear of the small house is a garden, whose scrubby soil gives plants little sustenance. She has planted collards, cabbage and other "greens" for home use, and there is a scrawny peach tree which she fears she "may never see bloom." At first she bitterly resented intrusion of the housing project, but recently she has become more conciliatory, if she can be assured of the small advantages she now enjoys. And she prefers to live alone, away from the eyes of prying people. "Aunt Sallie" was born in Houston, Miss., and was brought to Anniston at an early age. After she grew up and married, she went to Texas and other states. When she returned to Anniston, her furniture had been sold for storage charges. She and her husband separated, and since then she has gone through life alone. For years, she lived on money realized from bits of coal which fell off a chute into the small stream beside the railroad tracks. In dry seasons, there was a fair amount of coal, but when the rains came, the water washed it away and pickings were slim. One day, she recalls, she gathered only 20 cents worth. But she repaired the garden fence with discarded bed springs, and scratched the soil and planted some vegetables and flowers. "I'd sure hate to leave my garden," she said. "If they can give me a small lot and a little house, I could pay for it. I can get along somehow. "Aunt Sallie" gets $12 a month relief money, of which she says she would give the larger part toward paying for a new home.

$15 A WEEK

BY LOUISE HOLMES

YESTERDAY, Steve begs Ann to marry him. Even ego drinking. She is tempted, but her love for Paul cannot be denied. Before she decides, however, she has a chance to revisit Clara and her former friends.

CHAPTER XXX

ANN ran up the familiar stairs of Mrs. Follet's rooming house. She wore a slim little dress and short fur jacket. A sheer veil hung from a very small hat, her shoes had not come from an alley shop. She tapped lightly on Clara's door. "Come in—the door ain't locked," Clara's voice. Ann went in, stumbling over a china dog. "Hello, Clara—it's Ann." Clara few from the bedroom. She threw both arms around Ann. "You sweet old thing," she squealed. "Gee, you look swell—You haven't you come into the store?—Don't you need notions any more?—That's a swell thing you're wearing—Did you make it?—Oh, I've got so much to tell you—Stay for supper—We're having cabbage and spareribs—" "I can't stay, Clara. It's getting late, dinner is at 7." "Have you got a good job?" "Yes, I work for the Temples." No use telling Clara the whole truth, no use jogging her out of her happy little rut. "How's Roy?" she asked. "Oh, swell. He went to the drugstore for a pint of ice cream. We always have ice cream on Sunday." She spoke with satisfied pride. Clara asked, "What about you, Ann? How do you like being somebody's flunky?" Ann said, "I like my work." WHAT would Clara think, she wondered, if she knew that Ann was one of the Temple family, that she had definitely decided to marry Steve Claybourne. The next time he inquired, "When will you break down and marry me?" she was ready to say, "I've already broken down. Hadn't you noticed?" Suddenly Clara jumped from her chair, exclaiming, "Gee whizz—I've been holding two letters for you ever since you went away—Where did I put those letters?" Paul—It had never occurred to her that he might write. He had gone away to rid himself of her. Paul—Involuntarily her hands went out for the letters. Clara was scrambling through an untidy dresser drawer. "I put them here somewhere—it's been so long—where in the dickens—Oh—Triumphantly she produced them. Ann's eager fingers closed on the envelopes. They were postmarked, "Moline." One was dated June 2, the other June 25. Almost four months since Paul had written them. Ann was wild to be off. "I must run along," she said. "Tell Roy that I'm sorry to have missed him." She kissed Clara warmly. "Goodbye, dear," she said. THE autumn dusk was falling and Ann drove swiftly home. The letters were like living things beside her. She turned the car over to the chauffeur and ran to her room. Her heart fluttered and sang. What had Paul written so long ago? She sat down under a lamp, not stopping to remove her hat and jacket. With trembling fingers she opened the first letter. "Ann darling," it began and she caught her breath. "I thought I could run away from you but it's no good. Maybe I'm wrong, but I got the idea that you cared for me a little when you kissed me. Oh, Ann, do you know how sweet you are? Do you know how I take that kiss out of my heart every other minute and remember the ecstasy of it?" Ann closed her eyes, pressing her cheek to the page. "Darling," the letter went on, "I've had a break. Because of a shakeup here and a fine recommendation from my Chicago boss, I'm in charge of a number of departments, do the buying and all. This means $40 a week, not much, but perhaps enough. Do you think it enough? "Moline is different. There are little houses for rent. They have gardens and little front porches. Will you take a chance with me, Ann dearest? Will you? I'll hold my breath every time the postman comes. Oh, Ann, I love you, so." Ann dropped the letter. "I didn't answer," she moaned. "Paul, my dearest—I didn't answer your letter." It was a calamity of the most gigantic magnitude. Paul had waited for the postman—waited and hoped—Tears ran down Ann's cheeks. She opened the second letter. "Dear Ann," Paul had written. "Let me apologize for my impulsive letter of three weeks ago. You were right to ignore it, absolutely right. It was presumptuous of me to write such a letter. You had always been frank with me and I should have known better. Good luck, Ann. I hope you find all the lovely things you want. Paul." A MAID tapped at the door of Ann's bedroom. "Dinner is served, Miss Ann. Mr. Temple and Miss Irene are waiting." "Thank you, Letty—I'll be right down," Ann spoke automatically in a strangled voice. She wiped her eyes and crossed the hall to the sitting room telephone. Paul's letters had been written on Y. M. C. A. stationery. She put in a call for the Moline Y. M. C. A. "Oh, God," she whispered, holding the instrument with both hands, "let me reach him." Then the clipped voice of the operator. "You are connected with the Y. M. C. A. in Moline, Miss Temple." And, after a heart-breaking wait, "He isn't in, Miss Temple. I'll keep trying." Ann stood up, she paced back and forth. "I can't wait," she murmured frantically. "It may be hours—I can't wait." She ran down the stairs. Mr. Temple and Irene met her in the lower hall. Irene came to meet her. "It's something wrong, darling!" she asked. Ann burst into tears and Mr. Temple put his arm around her. "What's all this?" he asked worriedly. "It's Paul," Ann sobbed. "He wrote me four months ago—I just got the letters today—" She cried stormily. "He asked me to marry him—the sweetest letter—he said he'd hold his breath till the postman brought a letter—and I didn't answer—I didn't answer—" "Call him—right now," Irene suggested practically. "I did. He isn't in. Oh dear—" She leaned her head on Mr. Temple's shoulder. He held her gently. "Who is this Paul somebody?" he asked. "Paul Hayden," Ann explained more clearly. "He was only making $25 a week. He went away—I thought he went away because he didn't care for me. That was before I came here. I stopped this afternoon to see a girl where I used to live and she gave me the letters." She raised her head. Her eyes were shining. "I'd rather marry Paul than own the world—and I didn't answer his letter." "Where is he?" her uncle asked. "In Moline." "Where does he work?" "He's a floor man in the 10-cent store." Mr. Temple rubbed his chin. "That's not a bad berth," he said. "The smart ones work up to managements at good salaries. What kind of a man is he, Ann?" "He's wonderful," she said simply. Mr. Temple shook his head, bewildered. "You never can tell about girls," he said. "I thought it was Steve." Ann looked at him, her eyes like twin stars. "May I go to Moline, Uncle John—tonight? I've got to see Paul." (To Be Concluded)
