Carr states in his letter that he has found 516 cases in the United States, one of the latest being that of Lou Gehrig, former New York Yankee first baseman. Multiple Sclerosis is a disease more commonly known as "creeping paralysis." Carr states that he would like to hear from anyone suffering with the disease, what treatment has been given and what results have been obtained. He states that he will personally answer any letters he receives, giving his experience with remedies.

Some English Hold United States Partly To Blame for Current War Says Man Just Back from Europe

Some Englishmen believe that America is greatly responsible for World War II, according to Lester Hooker of Gorman, who returned last week from a trip to Turkey and Italy on which he discussed current conditions with residents of foreign countries. Hooker, visiting in Eastland Tuesday morning, was a mule tender on a boat which delivered 750 mules for army purposes to the Turkish government. The mules were sold by Ross Brothers of Fort Worth. The German resident, an American Legion veteran, said that the trip was made on the Scottsburg freighter, owned by Lykes Brothers. The trip started at New Orleans, La. The first stop was at Tampa, Fla., where 7,000 tons of phosphate for the Italian government were loaded. The boat then went to Gibraltar, Istanbul, Turkey, the British naval base of Malta, Genoa, Italy, and then back to the United States. Hooker left the boat on its return last week at Galveston. Amplifying what he said was the view of some Englishmen, Hooker said the matter was brought up by discussion with Englishmen officers and the debts England owes the United States, Hooker said he had the opportunity of talking with Englishmen when the British stopped the boat for inspection at Gibraltar and Malta. Hooker asked English officers who boarded the ship what the average British viewpoint on the debts owed America was. He said that all English acknowledge their obligation but their country could not pay after World War I because of the necessity of preparing for the current war. He said the English give the late President Wilson of the United States much blame for the current war because of his view that the allies after the first World War should not be severe with Germany. Events have borne out the contention of some British that the allies should have been "harder" and less lenient with Germany. Hooker was told in talks with the British. Some difficulty was encountered by the Scottsburg officers at Gibraltar because of the British belief in the possibility that the phosphate consigned to Italy might be shipped later by Italy to Germany. As a matter of fact, however, asserted Hooker, the phosphate was to be used in Italian factories to temper tools. The British were courteous in their dealings, said Hooker, but went about their searching of the ship and their discussions in a manner which indicated that they were in a war and that their methods must be businesslike. After the boat left Gibraltar the mules were unloaded at Istanbul. The German citizen said that Turkey is greatly modernized and the women no longer wear veils as they did at one time. He said that the women aren't attractive but the men seem the most handsome he had seen anywhere. After the boat unloaded the mules in Turkey the ship went to Genoa (known popularly as Genoa) in Italy. Hooker spent 10 days in the Italian city. While there he visited in the old home of Columbus, famed explorer. He met many Italians who speak English fluently, said Hooker in telling of his discussions with Italians. The average Italian, declared Hooker, is against the current war and would not favor fighting on Germany's side. Italy is predominantly Catholic, said Hooker. Some Italians even say there would be revolution should Mus-

Friday, April 19, to hold its annual election of officers and discuss last-minute plans for the District Dairy Day. Meeting with them will be their hosts, representatives of the Chambers of Commerce of Eastland. The present officers of the association are J. B. Eberhart, president; J. F. Alsup, vice-president; C. L. Wilson, secretary-treasurer, and F. E. Walker, A. W. Armstrong, J. H. Staff Club Has a Session Wednesday

The Staff Home Demonstration Club met Wednesday afternoon in the home of Mrs. Jim Jardin. The house was called to order by the vice-president, after which 10 minutes of recreation were enjoyed, the minutes were read and the chair called for old and new business. The program was then turned over to Mrs. Opal Lowry, with the topic being on poultry records. It was stated that the best way to keep poultry records was that when one found anything that would be of benefit to put it in a record book, then if anything comes a preference can be made to the book and a remedy might be found. Mrs. Butler Shugart was a visitor. Members present were Mmes. Tom Udey, R. P. Bowser, Tom Lowry, Jim Jordan, Wayne White, Opal Lowry, O. T. Hazard and Miss Sara May Barber.

SEA BATTLE RAGES ON NORWEGIAN COAST AS GERMANS OCCUPY OSLO

German forces occupied Denmark and several Norwegian coastal cities today, including the capital at Oslo as the British and French rushed "full aid" to Norway. A big naval battle was reported off the western coast of Norway, between allied and German fleets. The heaviest fighting was reported in the Oslo fjord, where two German warships, one reported to be the new 26,000-ton battleship Gneisenau, were reported to have been sunk and another damaged. An air battle took place near Oslo between German, Norwegian and possibly British planes, with several reported shot down. Meantime Norway's government fled from Oslo to Hamar, to the north, in the face of the German occupation of the capital, but Germans were attempting to set up a friendly government at Oslo. The British Press Association had no details about the naval battle reported off Bergen, Norway, but said that "good news may be forthcoming within the next 12 hours." The Dutch government canceled all army leaves and met in an emergency session to consider the report that a large allied fleet with an expeditionary force was steaming northward along the coast. In London Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain told the house of commons that "full aid was being rushed to Norway" amid cheers from the members and that the German occupation of Denmark and Norway would rebound and would eventually result in the defeat of Germany. Many neutral experts were puzzled over Germany's move, which is just what the allies had hoped for to break the impasse at the Western front. The German offensive was well planned and even as far north as Narvik on the Atlantic Coast, German marines, disguised as merchant seamen, were landed. The Germans were reported driven back several times in front of Oslo before they were able to capture the city. In Stockholm the Swedish cabinet met hurriedly in a special session and declared that any invasion of that country would be resisted to the utmost. Holland took the attitude of remaining neutral, stating that the country was believed to be outside the zone of war activities. At Copenhagen, which was given up by the Danes without any resistance as the Germans landed

C. of C. Directors Hear Reports and Discuss Business

The Ranger Chamber of Commerce directors met in regular session Monday evening and discussed a number of business items without definite action being taken on any of them. A. N. Larson made reports on plans for a membership drive, which he stated would start soon, and on the cleanup campaign, which he declared a success. A Garden Club for Ranger, which would work toward beautification of the town and a permanent cleanup instead of the annual weekly cleanup, was discussed at some length. C. E. May, president of the Ranger Safety Council, reported on activities of that organization, pointing out that a safety school had been conducted locally and talks on safety had been made before four clubs. He urged the cooperation of law enforcement officers in a safety drive. Discussion was heard on "My Home Town" speakers for the West Texas Chamber of Commerce convention at Big Spring, and selection of a typical American family, with no action being taken at the meeting. Those present included Lee Dockery, Floyd Killingsworth, A. J. Ratliff, R. S. Balch, L. R. Pearson, B. A. Tunnell, Dr. F. M. Kaykendall and C. E. May.

Next: British-French Union

What must be done, is done. Whatever the result of the European war, it now seems certain that Britain and France are being driven into a more or less permanent union. Not the military alliance of the World War, or even of this war, but a permanent union such that the two will be for practical purposes one country.

They would use one coinage and money. They would abolish customs barriers. Their organized labor and organized employer groups would federate. Transport and communication would be co-ordinated. Each would make compulsory in its schools the language of the other. Yet each would continue to administer its own domestic affairs as at present.

Does this sound fantastic? Will no nation sacrifice anything of its own national sovereignty? The answer is, it will if it be necessary.

For practical purposes, Britain and France are on just about this basis today. Co-ordination of their war effort has made it so. Even if they win the war, they may have to continue some such arrangement as a counterweight to the 80,000,000 Germans who now greatly outweigh either country taken alone.

Well, why not? Switzerland does pretty well as a federation of people speaking French, German, and Italian. Language is no barrier. Both British and France have vast colonial empires whose defense even in future peace times might well be undertaken in common. Peasant France and industrial England supplement one another pretty well. The franc is pretty much a tail to the sterling dog anyway—why not merge both into a new currency?

The world today seems to be separating out into a few large units.

True the disappearance of Ethiopia, Austria, Czechoslovakia, Albania, and Poland as small independent nations was accomplished by force.

But that may none the less compel the British and French to do voluntarily and by agreement what Russia, Germany, and Italy have been doing by conquest—create a larger unit which can function as an economically independent unit. Perhaps then some part of the Clarence Streit's dream of "Union" might come true, and other countries be drawn to enter the French-British union.

Would such a division of the world into a few great unions bring peace? Nobody knows. All we know is that the division of the world into small, antagonistic countries did not.

Judge Hughes Has No Stock In An Old Statement

By United Press

CLEBURNE, Tex.—Mrs. Sarah T. Hughes of Dallas, Texas' only woman district judge, pooch-pooches the suggestion that job-holding married women add to the list of the nation's unemployed males.

She told local members of the business and professional women's club that most of the 3,000,000 married women who work hold some kind of domestic job. Nearly all unemployed men come from industry, she said.

"A steel worker would not push a baby buggy for someone else," she said.

Judge Hughes, former state representative and a leader in the movement for woman jurors in the state, said that the objective could be attained only by electing state officials who are pledged to its fulfillment.

SERIAL STORY

K. O. CAVALIER BY JERRY BRONDFIELD

COPYRIGHT, 1940, NEA SERVICE, INC.

ESTERDAY: Eddie is in good luck. He gives the sea air credit. He tells Val that she wouldn't be mad if she could just forget it is a newspaperwoman. When she takes over preparing Eddie's Cavalier kids her, Bude Kimpel's potatoes. Only after she has peeled 25 pounds does she let him know that an electric peeler would have done the job in 15 minutes.

CHAPTER XI

I got a thousand bucks for each one I do I wouldn't have a one." Eddie Cavalier took the potatoes away from distastefully. "I'll have a double tonight," she said and Hansen roared.

took a beating in my second year fight that I'll never forget Eddie said to Mike Kelly, that was mild compared to what I'm taking aboard this mud but he grinned as he said it. Val looked liked that grin. It was a grin and boyish and she wondered why she'd never noticed it before.

The sky was overcast and there was a slight mist in the air when he had finished eating and went on deck.

"Pretty raw night," Captain Hansen observed. "I don't like looks of this," he said thoughtfully.

"I've read every piece of that matter aboard ship," Eddie grumbled. "Including the newspaper's manual and the calendar, from January to December."

"I've got some checkers in my cabin." "Well," he said delightedly, "what are we waiting for?"

They left Steve Hansen standing there. "Well, I'll be—"

AL curled her legs under her on the small divan and shook the little wooden discs from a box. "I'll take the black," she said.

"Perfect match for your heart," she observed. "Isn't that a coincidence? I didn't think you had a heart."

"I've beat him the first game and then he beat me three straight."

"You can't even make it interesting," he lamented. "Even when I pull my punches."

"Oh, you weren't trying?" "Practically playing blindfolded."

She pushed the checkerboard aside.

"What are your plans for the future, Eddie?" The suddenness and earnestness of her question surprised him for a long moment. He blinked a couple times and fumbled for an answer.

"I get it," he said slowly, meaningly. "Your story again, eh?" She felt a light flush creeping up her face. "Forget it. 'Nother game?"

"I'm sorry," he said, strangely contrite. "I'm really I don't know. But... why did you want to know?"

She looked at him levelly. "I am really interested. I've wondered why you took up fighting since the first time I saw you in the ring and spoke to you."

"It's paid me well. It's the thing I can do best. And it's honest work."

"For the most part," she admitted. "I intend to keep it that way," he said quietly.

"Do you like fighting?" "Why not? Oh, I'll admit it's no fun getting belted around and stopping a lot of leather with your face. But I don't stop so much," he added significantly.

She smiled slightly. "Yes, I know. You're a pretty slick article. Haven't got a mark on you. Not a smudge of a tin ear."

He held up his hands. "See these? A long time ago I hoped they'd hold a surgeon's scalpel some day. But things don't always work out. He leaned back against the cabin wall.

"Dr. Edward Cavalier," he mused. "That sounds pretty good, doesn't it? Or shall I say—would have sounded good? Funny, isn't it, how people can be denied the things that mean the most to them."

THERE was a funny feeling inside her as she waited for him to continue. She didn't dare utter a sound for fear it would break the spell. This was the Eddie Cavalier she had never known... the Eddie Cavalier the boxing world had never known, for that matter.

"Two years of college was all I was able to get in. My father was killed in an auto accident and I had to drop out of school to keep things going for Mom. I'd been conference welterweight champion in college and when Duffy Kelso came along with an offer to turn pro I jumped at it."

He looked at her keenly. "Simple, isn't it?" "Simple enough. But what about the future? I suppose you'll sink your savings into a restaurant, just like Dempsey, Walker, Cassinieri and some of the others."

"Nope. Not me. When I retire Duffy and I are going into the sporting goods business. Do you know," he said earnestly, "that this country is recreation conscious? People are always out playing, whether it's tennis, golf, swimming, baseball or a hundred other games. I'd like that, and I think I could be happy in it."

He straightened up suddenly. "Say, I've just about told you everything but the story about Aunt Emma."

"Something to look forward to." She cocked her head slightly and regarded him pensively. "You don't like me very much, do you?"

"She could almost feel his gray eyes boring into her. "At times you're tolerable," he confessed. "At other times I could slip you down without a bit of remorse."

"Grandma, what big words you use," she said mockingly.

"That reminds me," he continued. "My biggest criticism is that you're too clever. When women are too brainy they can be awfully unmanageable."

"Oh, you like the slow-on-the-upbeat type, eh? Sweet and simple but not very likely to be your mental superior. Sorry I don't conform."

"You've got me wrong again," he told her. "I'm not looking for a type. In fact, I'm not even looking."

"I wouldn't put it off too long," she murmured. "Too many men stumble around and finally fall over the first girl in their path."

He grinned. "What're you doing? Switching from sports to advice to the love-love? If so, why waste it on me?"

THERE was a pronounced roll under the Northern Belle, and she pitched worse than at any time so far on the voyage. Outside the cabin door Val could hear the wind as it whistled across deck and whipped at the tarpaulin covers over the lifeboats.

She had to close the glass port-hole when wisps of spray swept into the cabin and settled on her clothes and bed.

Val had difficulty falling asleep. But it wasn't the heavy weather which bothered her.

She lay in her bunk and thought of the boyish grin on Eddie Cavalier's face. . . . Recalled the look in his eyes when he held up his hands and talked of the surgeon's scalpel he would never hold.

Why was she thinking so much about it? She tried to shake it off, but it wasn't easy. It was for bells before she finally dropped off.

MODERN MENUS

BY MRS. GAYNOR MADDOX
NEA Service Staff Writer

DRIED fruits add interest and vitamins to your cookie jar. And a butterless-eggless cake takes some of the worry out of your food budget and puts lots of good eating into it at the same time.

FRUIT-OATIES

One and three-fourths cups cooked prunes, 1 cup butter, 2 cups granulated sugar, 1/4 cup honey, 2 eggs, 1 cup sifted all-purpose flour, 1/2 teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon soda, 2 teaspoons cinnamon, 3/4 to 6 cups quick-cooking oats, 1/2 cup chopped walnut meats.

Pit one cup prunes and cut into small pieces. Cream butter, add sugar and cream thoroughly. Add honey and prunes, and mix. Add beaten eggs and beat. Add flour sifted with salt, soda and spice, and mix. Add oats and nuts and stir until well blended. Drop in small mounds on greased cookie sheets.

Pit remaining 3/4 cup prunes, cut into pieces (about 5 to the prune) and place a piece on top of each cookie. Bake in a moderate oven (375 to 385 degrees F.) 13 to 15 minutes. Bake a test cookie; if necessary, add a few more oats, as size of eggs and moisture in prunes may vary slightly.

Makes approximately five dozen medium-sized cookies.
