Practicing to Land Nazis in England

The appearance, for the first time in Nazi air Taids on England, of 30 four-motored bombers of the Junkers 90 type, pictured above, caused Britons to wonder whether German troop landings from planes jects were imminent. Built as 40-passenger commercial planes, the Junkers giants were troop transports dur ing the invasion of Norway. They are 86 feet long, with a 115-foot wing span

France, Guinea Pig

Who says France under the new constitution will not be a republic?

It is Marshal Petain speaking with plaintive defiance. What France will be, no one knows. It is not a republic

The American people have considerable sympathy for France. That sympathy began when Frenchmen and France helped the struggling colonies to gain their liberty. True, the debt of Lafayette was generally regarded as paid in full in 1917-1918. But Americans have liked the spirit of Frenchmen and of France.

There is today and there always will be in the United States a sympathetic interest in the French people. But hat dies not imply a similarly sympathetic interest in any particular government under which they may be forced to live at any given moment. The American people are bound to watch intently the development of the Petain-Laval experiment in France.

Certainly France is no republic today. The whole country is now under the German heel. Nothing can be done without the approval of the German invaders. True, they disclaim interest in or responsibility for the French government. But it is clear that it is not an independent government. Therefore it cannot be a republic, for a proud independence is the first requisite of such.

As to what France may become: Petain said "the international capitalist system is outmoded . . . the base of our new state must be work, the family, and the fatherland." Well, those last three are bases of any state. As to capitalism, it may be possible to organize a state without private property and individual initiative, and retain freedomall we know is that it has never been done.

No present French official holds office by the votes of his fellow citizens. Is that the mark of a republic? No one may hold office in France unless born in France of a French father. Is that a democratic restriction? The new French constitution provides state regulation of religion, the family, youth, speech and the press. Is that liberty?

France may, as the marshal suggests, become again a republic. But it isn't now, and foundations have been laid for something quite different. What is built on those foundations we shall see.

The historic frigate Constitution is being recommissioned for active duty with U. S. Navy. Now, if they can only resurrect John Paul Jones-
