Scarlet Fever Is Prevalent In the State In January

AUSTIN, Tex .- The prevalence of scarlet fever in Texas during than during the same month of recent years, according to a statement issued today by Dr. Geo. W. Cox, State Health Officer.

Scarlet fever cases reported to the State Health Department by 275 city and county health officers are 50 per cent less than the formal expectancy of 107 cases his week on the basis of a seven-

Dr. Cox pointed out that the total cases of scarlet fever in 1940 were 59 per cent less than the peak year of the past decade, 1938's 4,445 cases, and 57 per ported in 1937.

Scarlet fever is always a danrerous disease. It is noteworthy that children between the ages of five and ten years are the most usceptible to scarlet fever, and cases are more virulent among this age group. Hence, it is vitally reloped against scarlet fever early in a child's life.

Remember, Comrade Benito?

Whether it be true, or not, that serious rioting has taken place in Northern Italian industrial cities, we do not know. It is more than likely that indirect reports are exaggerated or even untrue.

And yet-it is not illogical that thee should be such disorders, now or later. Seeds of socialism, and of anti-imperialism, were sown there many years ago, alter efforts have been made to oot them out, but deep beneath the soil of the Romagna they may emain today.

Who sowed those seeds? Thirty years ago a young socialist was agitating in Forli, Milan, and other cities, demanding violent sabotage against Italian imperialist military ventures into Tripoli. Oustanding in his advocacy of Violence, he urged that women lie down on the railroad tracks to bar trains from carrying Italian boys to Africa to fight for the realization of imperial ambitions. He even seved five months in jail after an affair at Forli in which railroad tracks were torn up to prevent the passage of troop trains.

The name of this agitator? Benito Mussolini, a ragged, sick, unstable workman who had spent hours agitating for 10 every moment of honest work he had ever done.

Thirty years have passed, and now, so wonderful is hu-If man life and the strange things that happen to men, it is this same man who is sending fresh transports full of young Italians to die in the same Tripoli for another Imperial Dream. It is this same man who dreams of resurrecting the ghost of the old Roman Empire, and who flings legions against Greece, and Albania, and Ethiopia.

Truly, in all history there are few parallels to this socialist turned fascist, this worker turned ruler, this antiimpeialist turned imperalist, this poor, ragged agitator tuned to a rich, briad-uniformed imperator, this man who tried to stop the trop trains issuing orders that the trains shall move again.

Should it happen, as it may have happened, or as it may yet happen, that discontented workmen of Milan or Turin, wtching the casualty lists that have cost 20,000 dead and wounded and 100,000 prisoners, watching the infiltration of the alien German, should riot against Autherity, one man, at least, will understand.

Benit Mussolini once stood where they will stand.

Another thought nagged at the back of her mind. This was Tuesday. Never before had Bill secured a pass for overnight leave on a week day. "Maybe he came here to apolo ze, to beg me to go back. . . . Maybe he got a special pass. . ."

stood on the porch, shivering, her fingers pressing the bell. Almost immediately, a light flashed on in the hall. Through the tiny glass pane of the upper door, Martha saw a pair of silver mules come down the stairs, and then a quilted satin bathrobe. Suzanne herself satin bathrobe. Suzanne herself was answering the door.

The realization of Bill's regret at their quarrel—the knowledge that he'd come all the way from glass, were not astonished at meeting Martha's worried brown ones. Then Bill had been here! Suzanne at the switchboard told him I was in New York with Paul!"

"Yes," she heard Mrs. Larkin's voice speculating. "Yes, he must have been at the office in the daytime. Where was he till he came was the function of the wast the matter?" satin bathrobe.

"Is that you, Mrs. Marshall?" called a voice from the kitchea. The door opened, and Mrs. Larkin, in a bathrobe, came into the hall. "I was just making some coffee. I was waiting for you. That's why I've got the parlor lamp on."

"Waiting for me?" Marthaturned, and went down the stairs again. She saw now that the old woman's hair was tumbled, hereyes heavy with sleep. As if she had retired and been rudely had retired and been rudely had retired and been rudely have been at the office in the day-time. Where was he till he came here? Do you reckon he was out among your friends—finding out if you told anybody anything? Asking them what they knew?" The shrewd old eyes gleamed with sudden malice. "His getting so excited about your clothes looks to me like your husband must have thought maybe you were running away!"

"Tm telling yeu! He thought was all arranged, that everybody—at least I—knew you'd eloped to New York, or something. He raved and swore and asked me where you were, how long you were going to stay—things like that. I told him it was nonsense. I told him I didn't know where Paul was, but that I was certain had retired and been rudely awakened.

"Oh, Mrs. Marshall," Mrs. Larlie wailed. "Your husband was nere! In his uniform. He rang and rang and rang—it must have been only an hour or two ago—and he carried on something fierce when I opened the door. He insisted on going upstairs. I couldn't make it cut. He wanted to see if your clothes were gone!" She wrung her hands. "I never saw a man in such a state, Mrs. Marshall! He was gill and I—Paul and I—" Her throat closed up, convulsively. Suddenly she was galvanized into action. She leaped to her feet, her body was fit to be tied!"

"My husband? Are you sure?" The room seemed to be whirling me. I must go out now. I—"

I told him I didn't know where Paul was, but that I was certain you weren't in New York at all. I—" Suzanne's creamy face flashed there on the sofa, misery shaking her. Then she caught at the old woman's words. "My friends ... asking them ... Suzanne! That's where Bill went! He must have gone to her house to find out if she knew whether Paul and I—" Her throat closed up, convulsively. Suddenly she was galvanized into action. Mrs. Larkin asked sharply, "Where were you, anyway?"

"In New York. I flew — the office—"

"In New York. I flew — the office—"

"In New York. I flew — the office—"

"It's I o'clock in the morning!"

But Martha was opening the front door. An instant later, the cold night wind stabbed her. She hurried down the street, oblivious.

"Don't, Martha! I—I'll do anything. Look, let's get this straight. How did you know he'd been here? Where did he go after that?"

"He went to my boarding house. office—"
"Aha!" cried the old woman.
"That's what he said! I thought he was out of his head. He said you were in New York and he wanted to find out about your ciothes!"

LONDON.-Seven lives were saved by a shelter which cost only 10 shillings to build when a high explosive bomb fell only three feet away.

The full blast of the bomb hit it, but it still stands on the edge of a huge crater.

The walls were pushed in, but the occupants were unhurt.

The shelter consisted of a hole in the ground roofed with corrugated iron and lined with planks,
