George Washington, Young Soldier, An Inspiration for Our New Army

The new soldier of today doesn't look much like George Washington did, but he has the same goal: the independence and defense of his homeland. The painting of Washington, by Charles Wilson Peale, was made sometime before the Revolution.

Just as many American boys are leaving home for the army these days, George Washington departed the big estate on the Potomac when he was 21 and turned to the service of his country. His first commission was that of a major, but a major's rank didn't carry the weight it does now. His first assignment by Governor Dinwiddie was to go from Virginia into the Ohio valley to warn the French against encroaching on British land. The journey took nearly three months. On the way home, an Indian shot at Washington point-blank, but missed. Later the young soldier was dumped into the ice-filled Allegheny, saved himself only by clutching at one of the logs of his raft. Governor Dinwiddie made him a lieutenant-

CANADA PLACES WAR MATERIAL ABOVE TROOPS

By NORMAN MACLEOD
United Press Staff Correspondent
OTTAWA.—(Circles close to the war scene on Parliament Hill realize that behind the Canadian government's sudden abandonment of the 30-day military training scheme for youth lies the dramatic story of Britain's urgent need for every kind of war material. It is no secret here that that story was told in full and careful detail to Defense Minister J. L. Ralston and Supply Minister C. D. Howe on their recent visit overseas.

It is equally well known that it is as a direct result of representations made to the Canadian ministers that the federal war cabinet has placed industry in the driver's seat of the war effort, taking steps to see that no plan of compulsory military training is followed that might prejudice output.

Two main points are understood to have been stressed by United Kingdom authorities to the recent missions.

The first is that, although men trained and equipped would be welcome, untrained men are not wanted in Britain now. The second is that war materials of every kind are wanted urgently.

Obviously, Canada's scheme of 30-day compulsory training could not furnish the trained men which Britain is prepared to welcome. Equally obviously, as testified by strenuous protests from manufacturers in all parts of the Dominion, it was threatening substantial interference with war production.

Hence the speedy decision of the war cabinet to scrap the scheme when the Canadian ministers reported their conversations overseas.

This is the explanation of the government's change of policy which well-informed federal circles credit. It is only fair to say, however, that it is at variance with one of the possibly greater interests which Conservative quarters favor.

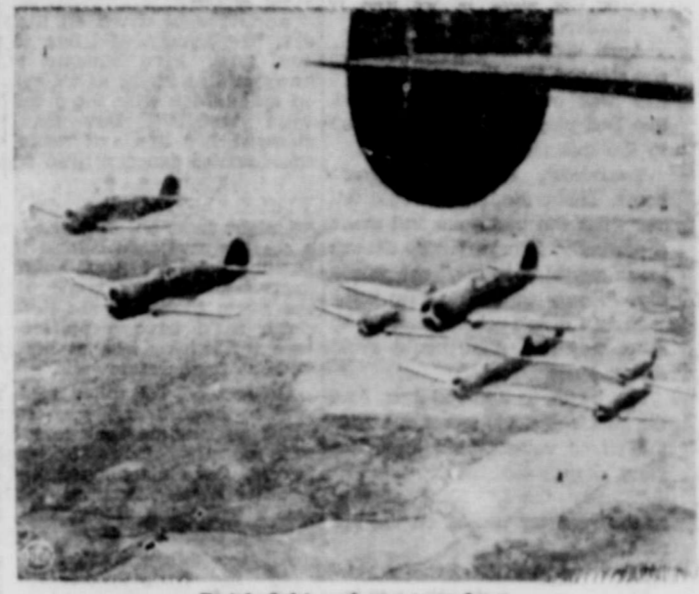

The Tories suggest the abandonment of the 30-day clause is the result of the defeat which War Service Minister J. G. Gardiner suffered at the hands of his colleagues. A believer in the ultimate importance of manpower in the war, Gardiner has been insisting that the training scheme should take precedence over all other interests. Since the policy now being embraced is the opposite of that which the war service minister championed, Conservative charge it is to be explained simply on the grounds his colleagues united to reject his views.

Impartial Ottawa circles can discern no evidence to support it. Scrapping of the 30-day plan, it is generally agreed, is an act of deference to British needs, without reference to any controversy on the point that might have been dividing the cabinet here.

The gain in industrial production from the government's new policy undoubtedly will be direct and substantial. In the first place, the four-month training plan will affect, it is anticipated, some 70,000 men a month, as compared with upward of 300,000 under the 30-day scheme. In the second place, from the fact of their youth, those affected by the new policy either will be those who have not entered industry or have not achieved key posts in it.

Finally, in the last several weeks the ministry of war services has been suggesting to industry that it should be training workers to be substituted for those whom the 30-day plan would take as it worked up through the higher age groups. It will be unnecessary now for arrangements to be made to substitute workers for those whom the 30-day plan would take as it worked up through the higher age groups.

State Capitol Is Well Protected In Case of a Fire

By United Press
AUSTIN, Tex.—Legislators who were at the capitol one day recently got a demonstration of what would happen if a fire should occur in the half-century old Texas state house.

A fire alarm was set off from the capitol's automatic alarm system shortly before 11 a. m. Within a few minutes fire apparatus was rushing into the state capitol grounds from north, east, south and west entrances.

The alarm proved to be a false one. Austin firemen have the state capitol set out as a fire spot that calls immediately for a response of equipment from all but three outlying stations. Routes are arranged for the seven others to go to the capitol grounds so that none interferes with another.

Chemical equipment arrives first for prompt action. Hoses in run to all connections in the area, and ladders that can be extended to the roof without the truck leaving the drive that circles the state house building are quickly on the scene.

A previous state capitol was burned in a blaze by an overheated stove. In its more than 50 years the present red granite building has had many small fires—usually trash in an office waste basket, but no serious loss. Awning fires from carelessly slipped cigarettes are of frequent occurrence.

Students At Penn Test Out Vaccine

By United Press
PHILADELPHIA.—Medical school students at the University of Pennsylvania have enlisted in science's battle against influenza. Half of the 484 freshmen and sophomore students have been inoculated. The other half remain unvaccinated.

Those receiving a shot in the arm in the university's bacteriological department got a dose of the Rockefeller Foundation's new influenza vaccine. It is a mixture of "A" type of flu virus. Scientists will check the health records of both groups of students in an attempt to determine the effectiveness of the new vaccine.

Town Gives Up In War With Beavers

By United Press
SAYONA, N. Y.—An 18-month struggle between Sanford Lake beavers and the Bath Town highway department is nearing a showdown, with the industrious little animals with the apparent winners.

Indications are the highway department is only too willing to retire from the scene after a year and a half of matching wits against the dam-builders whose sides of an ideal home included raising the level of the lake until it flooded a section of a little-used town road.

The fight between man and animal started in the summer of 1939 when a family of beavers began construction of a dam at the lake outlet to raise the water level and give them easier access to young saplings along the shore. Unfortunately, the outlet was near a road and within a few weeks the beavers' activities threatened to make it impassable.

Lindsay White, then highway superintendent, resolved to oust the little water folk. He had the dam torn out, only to find it rebuilt the following day. Then he built the road higher, but the ever-rising lake level encompassed that, too, along with a narrow isthmus which had separated the lake from a small duck pond.

For five months highway workers tried to discourage the beavers by tearing out their dam periodically. The road level was raised several feet. Finally, thoroughly discouraged himself, White applied for a state conservation permit to trap the animals. But even then the beavers proved too smart. They repeatedly covered the traps with mud, when they did not spring them for variety. They even built the dam over them.

The traps finally caught two of the beavers; but by this time public opinion was swinging in their favor. Recently Savana business and sportsmen decided the road was less valuable than the beavers and framed a petition to the town board requesting that the road be closed. No objections were raised.

Girl Requests Aid For An Army Post

By United Press
BUFFALO, N. Y.—Red-haired 23-year-old Irene Stankiewicz wants to become a soldier.

The attractive young woman is so in earnest that she wrote Sen. James M. Wood to arrange her enlistment and offered a barrage of arguments in support of her plan. "I'll do anything they'll assign me," she said. "I'll dig ditches, go for long forced marches, fire cannon, machine gun, rifles, anything. Just let 'em try me."

Ever since conscription began Miss Stankiewicz has been eager to do her bit for national defense, and she says five of her girl friends would join her in the army "at the drop of a hat or a registration card." She emphatically disagrees with the theory that women are not good army material.

"I'm sure girls can do anything with just a little training. When through training, they've built up their strength, endurance and stamina and put the men to shame."

TEXAS CITY, Feb. 18.—The Maritime Commission today opened an investigation of a fire aboard the Tanker Pan-Massachusetts, which was loaded with 105,000 gallons of gasoline.

Great Britain warned Bulgaria today that any "German movement" may cause severance of diplomatic relations and draw Bulgaria into the war.

The warning came 24 hours after the announcement of a Bulgarian-Turkish non-aggression agreement, which left the way open for Germany to march into Bulgaria and cause Greece to make peace with Italy.

The statement concerning the British position was offered by British Minister George Rendel. He declared Germany alone would be responsible if war came to Bulgaria.

Despite British statements there was general relief and satisfaction at the agreement in Bulgarian quarters. They took the view that it had reduced the threat of Bulgarian involvement in the war.

Despite contradictory opinions prevailing in Balkan quarters, British sources insisted that the Turkish-Bulgarian declaration did not affect Turkey's commitments to Britain. They claimed there still is no assurance Turkey would not fight in the event Germans move to aid Italy against Greece.

The declaration was hailed in Germany as a diplomatic victory which materially altered the political situation in the Balkans. Russia is said to have taken the view that if the Germans attacked Greece they would leave the Dardanelles alone and at the same time the German march into Greece would nullify the importance of the Dardanelles.

Turkish censorship is to tight there is little direct news about Ankara's attitude and the Greeks maintained silence on how the action would affect them.

Dream of 40 Years Is Coming True For El Paso Woman

By United Press
EL PASO, Tex.—A dream of almost four decades is beginning to become a reality for Mrs. Jeanle M. Frank of El Paso.

Thirty-seven years ago she came to this border city, saw the mesa rim that leads to rugged Mt. Franklin on the city's edge and said, "That's where I want my home."

Her home will be built there on the edge of the mesa, overlooking El Paso, the Rio Grande Valley and the Mexican city of Juarez, with the beautiful Guadalupe Mountains as a backdrop, in a few months.

For 37 years she has planned and worked for her home. A school teacher in the El Paso public schools, she is well-known throughout the city and frequently talked of the time when "my home will be built on the rim."

At first there was some objection to the house on the part of other "rim" residents, who feared Mrs. Frank's home might obstruct their view. For a while she feared her years of dreaming would be in vain, but the city zoning board finally granted her permission to build on the selected site.

She designed her own room which will be a studio with places for her books, a fireplace, and a bird's-eye view of El Paso.

Your Federal Income Tax Deduction For Interest

Amounts paid or accrued within the taxable year 1940 as interest on indebtedness are deductible, with certain exceptions, from gross income in determining net income. Deductible items include interest on borrowed money to defray personal expenses, and on money borrowed for the purchase of real or personal property. If a person owes money on a lien or mortgage note on his home, the amount of the interest may be deducted. Indebtedness, however, need not be evidenced by lien, judgment, or mortgage to make the interest on it deductible. Frequently indebtedness is evidenced only by a note.

Interest paid on indebtedness incurred in the purchase of obligations of the United States issued after September 24, 1917, and original-subscribed by the taxpayer, is the interest upon which is wholly exempt from Federal income tax, is not deductible.

Interest paid on behalf of another where there is no legal obligation on the part of the payor or is not deductible by the payor. In such cases the amount is the same as a gift.

As interest paid is deductible, so interest received is taxable (except interest on obligations of a State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia; or obligations of a corporation organized under act of Congress, if such corporation is an instrumentality of the United States; or the obligations of the United States or its possessions to the extent provided in the acts authorizing the issue thereof). All such amounts, including interest received on bank and savings deposits, must be included in the taxpayer's return of gross income.

The Tragedy of Italy

Nothing is easier (or more despicable), than to kick a man when he is down. It is easy, at long range, to administer a verbal kicking to the Italian people, especially now that their armies have taken such a literal kicking around in Albania, in Libya and in Ethiopia.

It is unjust, however, to use these failures as a blanket indictment of the Italian people, or especially to allow it to reflect on Americans of Italian descent.

There is nothing wrong with Italians as such. They did all right when they were kicking Radetsky out of Milan a hundred years ago, and Garibaldi's redshirts and Mazzini's legions were the admiration of the world when they made their gallant but hopeless resistance to the Austrians and French.

But they were fighting to defend their country, fighting for freedom. And that makes all the difference.

People who like to bring up Caporetto forget the Piave and the fact that Italy, almost knocked out, rose again and delivered a knockout blow against the Austrians, losing 600,000 dead and a million wounded. But again, Italian soldiers were throwing Austrian invaders out of northern Italy. They were willing to fight and to die for that, and for the bright dream of freedom promised by their allies.

Since that time, Italian military exploits have not been so brilliant. Sent to the plague-ridden, God-forsaken wastes of Ethiopia to conquer a savage land for no reason that they could see, they were not impressive. Sent to Spain to take a hand in a civil war in which they were not interested, Guadalajara was the result. And now in Albania, where they know they have no business to be in the first place; in Libya, where they have resolutely refused to go as "colonists," and in Ethiopia, where the young Neapolitans look at one another and ask "Why?"—they surrender in droves rather than die.

Men who served with the squad-mates of Italian origin in the World War know that such men were good men; loyal companions and brave fighters. But they were fighting for a free land, their land, to keep it free and to make their motherland free, not for a mad imperialist dream of vanished empire. They will do it again, if need be, and do it well.

Bravery is not alone in fighting and dying when told. It is also in choosing a cause worth dying for. For tyranny the Italians are loath to die.

Your fortune is made if you'll invent a doorbell that'll tell who's ringing it.

A lot of Germans are likely to find out the difference between being hungry for war and plain hungry.

SERIAL STORY

DRAFTED FOR LOVE

BY RUTH AYERS

COPYRIGHT 1941, NEA SERVICE, INC.

YESTERDAY: Kent goes on, criticizing April—the blithering, wide smiling, vain spoiled. April, still posing as Ann, is hurt, but the analysis has an amusing side, too. April keeps her secret, though. Knowing what this day means to Kent. And she adds a postscript: "No matter what happens, I love you." And means it.

APRIL MEETS TROUBLE

CHAPTER IX NOW the thing to do was to harden her heart.

April didn't look at Kent after she stepped into the roadster. The day was over, the game ended. She had played her part right up to the last tag-line.

Tomorrow, Ann might come home. If she did, April would tell her what she had done and make it perfectly clear why. "He doesn't mean anything to me," she would say. "I only wanted to help you."

If Ann didn't return, there'd be some way she, April could avoid seeing Kent.

She began to think of Ann, Ann the gentle one, the sweet one with the silver voice who'd have her great chance tonight.

"Steady there," Kent advised as the roadster rocked on the red road.

"I'm trying to beat the storm." "For a minute it felt as if we were headed for a spill."

"No, we just missed one." She scanned the skyline. Clouds were marching around the tents of the hill, gray and menacing.

"Funny," she said, "how a day can start all sunshine and then get to floundering around in clouds and darkness."

"If you'll overlook my being lyrical, I could say it always grows bright again."

"For you, it will." That was safe to say. He could take it the way he wanted. She must keep everything impersonal between them, impersonal as the weather. The speedometer danced.

And all the time, her mouth settled in a hard line and her heart grew more stoney.

"I feel like an oat sitting here while you do all the driving," Kent said. "I ought to be taking the wheel for the trek home. It's too much for you, Ann."

"Not at all." She bit off the words. "I like it."

The top was up but already the first sweep of gale tore at the side of the car. Nip, the wire-haired, snuggled close at April's side. Kent hunched forward, straining as if he couldn't bear his helplessness.

"If I could only see you for one second," he said. "I bet your eyes are sparkling and that there's a charcoal smudge on your nose. I like to look at you when you're intent on something, Ann. You have a lift to your head that I'm crazy about."

April fought down an urge to say, "Yes, you would like to see Ann now. Five hundred miles away and as intent as all get-out on an audition with the great Vivano tonight." But no, she clamped her lips and made the speedometer dance a little faster.

DUSK blurred the daylight, night came on. The wind was a roaring cavalcade behind them, pushing them on. April knew she must reach Kent's home before the storm broke. If she timed it right, she'd have a perfect excuse for leaving him at his gate without further farewells.

On and on, the miles sped but even on the short cuts they seemed twice as long as they had been this morning. Once the engine balked. Once she stopped for gas. Another time she tried to slip past a truck and almost sent the car in a ditch.

All the things Kent had said about her came back. It was something to think of Hal Parks. Hal was sophisticated, smart, worldly and he liked her. And yet, blast him, he was the one who indirectly had started her on this ill-fated fling when he'd said there were other things you could be drafted for besides the army. Drafted for love! It sounded swell but she'd been turned down, rejected, service deferred.

"We're sure playing tag with the storm," Kent said, innocent of the storm that shook her to the core.

"You bet." She felt his eyes on her as the car raced. Ann never drove spectacularly.

"Where are we now?" "Only about five miles to go."

Four miles, three and then as she reached the hill road that led to Pattonville she could pick out the lights of the town far below.

"Pattonville was on her face, her hands trembled when she finally slowed the car."

"At last!" Her words were a long sigh.

"Swell going," Kent said. "If I hurry, I can make it to my home."

As she spoke, there was a warning rattle on the hood, a spattering on the canvas top.

"Haltstorm," Kent was brief. "We'll make it for the house."

April spoke above the wind. "I'll take you to the gate and then I'll see you in a blitzkrieg!"

But even in his sightlessness, Kent had leaned over and was enfolding her in strong, sure arms.

"Come along, Nip," he called and bore April triumphantly through the gate and up the brief walk to the door.

Laughing down, he said, "Ann, gal, anyone would say you were a lunatic. Think I'm going to let you go off alone in a blitzkrieg?"

"No, Kent. I want to go home, I must!" The wind threw back her voice.

FOR April knew once she crossed the threshold of the Carter home, disaster awaited. Great-Aunt Elizabeth Carter would know she wasn't Ann Burnett.

She tried to remember what Ann had said about Auntie Carter but it seemed now as if the hailstones were pelting her brain and blotting out every thought.

"There," Kent said, half carrying her across the threshold after he'd opened the big, grilled door, "this is what you might call symbolic."

Nip squeezed in and made a great to-do about shaking the sticky ice stones from his fur. Kent reached to help April off with her coat. The hood toppled with a splash of drops. "You're shivering," Kent said, "we'll go back to the library where a fire's burning."

"No, I'm not cold," April chattered. "I'll stand here just a minute—then I'll have to go."

In the shadows of the cavernous hall, April saw the parlor leading off to the right. It, too, was cavernous with heavy carved furniture, oil paintings and a massive square piano.

And over the mantle was a mirror. April's eyes met April in the mirror and she knew with her coat and cap off, no one could ever mistake her for Ann, no matter how dim the light.

But except for the fire hissing somewhere at the other end of the house, there wasn't a sound. Perhaps she wouldn't have to see Auntie Carter after all!

"Kent," she began, "I'm a sight. Please, I couldn't see anyone looking the way I do."

As if this had been an invitation to catastrophe, a voice spoke out of the silence of the upper hall.

"Kent, is that you?" "Yes, Aunt Elizabeth."

April followed his eyes in the direction of the stairs where a small, erect figure was poised.

All-Texas Beauty Exposition To Be In Dallas Feb. 23-25

By United Press DALLAS, Texas.—More than 4,000 beauty shop owners and operators are expected to attend the All-Texas Beauty Exposition to be held here Feb. 23, 24, and 25.

The show will be conducted as a post graduate course for Texas beauty operators and the scene for the introduction of new special styles and changes in methods. Jack Bond, executive secretary of the Texas Association of Accredited Cosmetologists, said:

"The hairdressing industry has undergone a big change because of the war," Bond said. "We must now depend upon Hollywood and New York as our style and creation centers rather than Paris."

Several of the most prominent hairdressers in the industry will be in Dallas to introduce new hairdos for winter wear, bond added.

In the list he included Thomas Frank, who operates in New York and Chicago, and Joseph from Hollywood, who dresses the hair of many of the Hollywood stars for their appearances in public.

The exposition will include an innovation in clothes and hair-styling. Representatives of a famous Dallas women's store will collaborate with noted hair-stylists in creating hair-dos to complement spring clothes. A clinic, built on this theme, will be conducted during the three-day session.
