Politics, Pistols and Piolets

To begin with, it is quite useless for Americans to try to understand the death of Samuel-Walter Ginsburg-Krivitsky. The detective-thriller aspect of a former Russian secret service man found dead in a Washington hotel is E. Phillips Oppenheim-ish enough, and there will be a wild and violent discussion in radical circles about whether he was the victim of political revenge.

But the whole business of political assassination or political suicide either, Russian style, is beyond us simple American to understand.

Was Ginsburg-Krivitsky murdered by an implacable political assassin of the Russian OKPU, who pursued him across the world with a bloodhound determination that makes Jefferson Hope's pursuit of Drebber and Stangerson in Sherlock Holmes' story look like a casual encounter? Did the victim become horrified at his exposures of international plotting by the Soviets, and kill himself in sheer remorde, as many of his Communist associates appear to have done in Moscow? Did the terror of impending and unavoidable assassination drive him to pull the trigger of his own gun first? Or was suicide or murder due to some other and unknown cause?

We do not know, and we probably never shall know. All that comes to the American mind, which is simple and direct, is that the kind of life that is lived in the more conspiratorial circles of Russian radicalism is quite beyond our understanding.

To us, a man goes by his own name, or has it legally and publicly changed by a court. To the Russian, frequent change of name is commonplace, and suggests no for it was in this month iv. 1911 "While each advertising cam culpability.

Leon Sedoff, son of Trotsky, died in Paris in 1938, apparently a suicide, with the police unable to substantiate troit, and one of the few agencies afford to ignore the tremendous his father's charges of OGPU murder. Trotsky himself in the country to have retained its cleavage power of newspapers, was brutally murdered last year in Mexico by a zealot wielding a piolet, or Alpine climbing-axe. Now Krivitsky, who publicly had renounced what he claimed was a lifetime of international intrigue and spying for the Russian government, and who wrote a long expose of it, dies by did not reach an annual billing of be right behind the actual salesthe gun. There have been others. The only common denom- a million dollars until many years man and the actual sale." inator has been a common opposition to the present Russian government.

Whether this newest thriller of the slums of international politics is murder or not, we may never know. But the long succession of such deaths is beginning to put a Freckles and His Friends—By Blosser strain on coincidence.

Maybe even innocent-minded Americans will begin to be convinced that the real world of today has thrown into shadow the fictional world created by Oppenheim and Achmed Abdullah

INIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS wishes major league clubs would Quit meddling with its athletes.

Within three years, the Illini have lost two brilliant basketball and baseball players to the American League before they finished their college courses—Lou Boudreau and now Walter Evers.

Bill Hapac is another versatile star who hopped from Illinois to an American League outfit, but the current scoring leader of the National Professional Basketball League graduated before signing as an outfielder with Detroit, which was quite all right.

What Illinois objects to is the boys being rushed before they have completed their education.

Boudreau was declared incligible between semesters in 1938.

Boudreau was declared ineligible between semesters in 1938, when it was disclosed that his mother was receiving $100 a month from Cleveland for the promise of his future services.

HOOT EVERS, who appeared destined to be one of Illinois' all-II time greats in basketball and baseball, will sign with Detroit as an outfielder. Standing 6 feet 2 and weighing 185 pounds, he is fast and has a remarkable arm. Last season as a sophomore he hit 253 . . . led the Big Ten in home runs, triples, total bases. Only 19, he probably will join Hapac, his former basketball and baseball mate, on the Tigers' Beaumont faim.

Like Boudreau and Hapac, he was the Illini's top basketball

In the case of Evers, Illinois also no doubt wishes its studied were not so hard.

The handsome Collinsville blond's collegiate athletic career came to a close when he was refused a special examination in history, which if he had passed would have permitted him to history, which if he had passed would have permitted him to rejoin the Illini hoopers for the Minnesota game in Minneapolis.

ORDINARILY a special exam is easy to obtain, but reports that Evers would drop out of school to make the most of his big league opportunity didn't help him toward that end. Friends felt that one story in particular, which told of the large number dicuts he had during the first semester, had placed the faculty concerned in such a position that it could hardly give Hoot the exam for fear of being accused of favoritism. So, because major league clubs couldn't walt until they got their hands on him, Illinois loses another standout athlete in the midst of a brilliant college career. And the big show gets another Evers, a much larger edition who in these days only has to possess some small share of the original's ability to be perfectly satisfactory . . . and then some.
