Piccolos and Drums

What is to be the fate of the small nation in the days

Jan Masaryk, foreign minister of the Czech government-in-exile, says that after the war the small nations of Europe must be reconstituted and play their part in the concert of Europe, even though they plan only piccolos, and never the drums.

It's not too early to begin trying to write a score for such a symphony, even though it seems clear that it must be written differently from any political music yet heard in the world. To carry further Masaryk's symbolism, it is quite all right to let each of the small nations play its own musical instrument in the concert, but it is becoming clear that all must play something like the same selection, and there must be some sort of reference to a leader if there is to be any harmony at all.

The Nazi conception is not that of a concert of different instruments. There would be only one big Nazi pipeorgan played by Der Fuehrer, while the rest of the Europe, and eventually the world of the pipe-organ grew large enough, just sweated at pumping the bellows.

Concert there must be. But you can't have a concert without agreeing on what score to play, and appointing somebody as leader. The effort last time was to appoint the League of Nations as leader, but the trouble was that nobody felt compelled to follow, and the resultant discords RED RYDER still shriek across the world. This time we must do better.

Whoever wins the war is going to be the leader. Either Germany wins, abolishes concert work entirely, and sets the western world to pumping air for her own pipeorgan, or the British and Russians win, decide what tune is to be played, and beat the time. The best hope there is that eventually the rest of the musicians, even the squeaking piccolo-players, may eventually be given a change to vote on what to play, or even occasionally direct a number. Whereas if the Nazis win the rest of the world has nothing to look forward to but a lifetime of dreary sweating at the pumps.

A Europe playing 40 different national anthems at the same time, however, as the Poles, Czechs, Hungarians, Croats, Serbs, Slavs, Rumanians, Bulgarians and Albanians were playing before the outbreak of war in 1939, promises little improvement.

No maestro has yet arisen, however, to propose a tune so universally popular that all seem willing to play it together, nor so magnetic as to suggest that all will follow

AS seen and heard from a knothole on Washington's back-fence gos-sip, this attempt to make peace between Finland and Soviet Russia involves so much of an effort at face saving and national honor maintaining that the whole affair might well be taking place in the Orient, where face salvaging is a recognized part of the national character No one doubts Finland's sincerity and integrity. Everyone appre-

Key to the solution lies in the Russian province of East Karelia, which the Finns have penetrated. If the Finns would stop short of the Murmansk-Archangel rallroad, the Soviet face—and neck—would

Great Britain has a face to save in this proposition, too. Urged to declare war on Finland as a relief measure to Soviet Russia and as a means of putting more pressure on Germany, the British have been most reluctant to take this fateful step—and for good reason. Through a Finn named Ramsay—of Scotch descent—Great Britain has control of a good part of Finland's merchant marine. And these are the ships, specially built for battling arctic ice, that Great Britain is using to haul supplies to Murmansk.

How the United States is to come out in this face-saving scramble remains to be seen. This country is in effect, asking Finland to make
